PREFATORY NOTE

I am under great obligations to Captain George Hoffman Penrose, U. S. A., and Charles Penrose Keith, Esq., of Philadelphia, for their valuable assistance in the preparation of this volume. They had been engaged for some years in gathering material for a history of the Penrose Family, and at the beginning of my work, they generously placed all of their collections at my disposal.

THE PENROSES IN ENGLAND.

It is from a quaint old couplet, formed by a number of Cornish words, that the home of the Penrose family is learned:

“By Tre, Ros, Pol, Lan, Caer and Pen,
You may know most of the Cornish men.”

According to Polwhele,* many of the families of Cornwall which held lands before the Conquest, were distinguished by the appellations of Tre, Pol, and Pen, and of these there existed in his day some who had preserved from all antiquity and still retained unalienated the very estates whence they derived their names.

In all lands and in every generation, Welshmen have proudly recounted the past glories of the Cymry, and with equal tenacity their Cornish kinsmen have dwelt upon the ancient independence of the Danmonii. The last, the most civilized of the early British tribes, was not subdued until the time of Athelstan, when the Saxons asserted their superiority. And then, though conquered, the rock-bound coast and rugged fastnesses of the Cornish peninsula preserved, as it were lovingly, the Cornish language and customs, so that it was not until the last century that their dialect became extinct. In the middle ages, the Cornish people not only spoke no English, but did not call themselves Englishmen, and legal documents of that period spoke of "Anglia et Cornubia."

The word Penrose is of Cornu-British * origin, and, according to the "Parochial History of the County of Cornwall," an elaborate and careful work compiled from ancient authorities, is derived as a surname from the Manor of Penrose, in the parish of Sithney, County Cornwall, which manor gave dwelling to the very ancient family seated in that place, it is said, before William the Conqueror landed in Britain. The manor was charmingly situated near Helston,† on the banks of the Loo-Pool, which partly belonged to it. Writing of this estate, Richard Carew, author of the "Survey of Cornwall," published in London, 1602, says: "Under [Helston] runneth the river Loo, whose passage to the sea is thwarted by a sandy bank which forceth the sea to quart back a great way and to make a pool of some miles in compass. It breedeth a peculiar kind of trout, in bigness and goodness exceeding such as live in the fresh water, but coming short of those that frequent the salt. * * * * * To this Pool adjoineth Mr. Penrose's ‡ house, whose kind entertainment hath give me and many others experience of these matters. He married the daughter of Rashleigh. He beareth Argent three bends sable, charged with nine roses of the field."

In Dr. Borlase's § time, the parish church of Sithney, dedicated to St. Sithuinus, contained a tablet inscribed to the memory of Bernard Penrose, Prior to St. John's Hospital, who died in 1532, and in the east window of the south aisle, are still

* The Cornish language occupied an interesting position between the Cymrian and the Gaelic, and was the representative of a tongue once current over all South Britain.

‡ Thomas Penrose, who, marrying about 1576, Agnes, daughter of John Rashleigh, became the ancestor of Sir William Gordon Gordon-Cumming, baronet, who still quarters the Penrose arms.

§ William Borlase, LL.D., F.R.S., a very ingenious and erudite writer and of an ancient Cornwall family, who was born at Pendeen, 2 February, 1695-6. He was Rector of Ludgran, and author of "Antiquities Historical and Monumental of Cornwall." He died 31 August, 1772.

to be found the arms of the Penrose family in stained glass, which are also emblazoned on a wooden tablet affixed to the wall of the same aisle: Argent, three bends sable, each charged with as many roses of the field. Crest—a Loo trout naiant or.

The arms of the Penrose family, as given in the Herald's Visitation of Cornwall in 1531, were: Ermine, on a bend azure three roses or; but subsequently the blazon was as noted above on tablet and window of St. Sithuinus.

The roses in the Penrose coat-armor were probably suggested by a play on the last syllable of the name, a custom quite common in early heraldry; and a tradition in the family makes the Cornish Penroses adherents of the house of York * in its famous feud with the rival house of Lancaster. The rose, queen of flowers, entered England freighted with legendary lore. It was the Syrian emblem of immortality, and perhaps some cognate idea makes the Chinese plant it over their graves, as the Greeks and Romans carve it on their tombs. In ancient Egypt it was the symbol of silence, and in classic mythology this significance was preserved in Eros offering a rose to the god of Silence. The Greeks held that the rose derived its color from the blood of Venus when she trod on the thorn of the white rose in going to the dying Adonis. The Turks claim that it is colored with the blood of Mohammed, and never suffer it to be on the ground. Christian mythology ascribes its origin to a holy maiden of Bethlehem, who, condemned to death by fire, prayed fervently for deliverance, whereupon the fire was quenched and "the burning brands became red roseres, and the unkindled brands white roseres, and full of white roses, and these were the first roses, both white and red roses, that ever any man sought."

* "And, by my sould, this pale and angry rose,
As cognizance of my blood—drinking hate,
Will I forever, and my factions wear,
Until it wither with me, to my grave,
Or flourish to the height of my degree."

—First Part of "King Henry VI." Act II., Scene 4.

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

Henceforth the rose became the flower of the martyrs; and it was also the device of Martin Luther.*

The fish in the crest of the Cornish family—a Loo trout naiant or—is, as were fishes in general, an emblem of chastity. It is supposed that fish were regarded with especial favor as heraldic charges in the middle ages, from the belief that they were the first living things created by God,† and from the fact that in early Christian times it was used as a symbol of Christ, because the initial letters of “Jesus Christ, the son of God, the Saviour,” in Greek, formed the word ΙΧΘΥΣ, “a fish.”

In ancient times the lordship of the manor of Lizard in Cornwall was vested in the family of le Archer, one of whom, Flora, the relict of Peter le Archer, petitioned in 1283 against Godfrey de Penrose and Mary his wife, and against Dionisia and Nicholae, daughters of Richard de Penrose, concerning lands at Boffrantam, within the aforesaid manor. Doubtless this was the Richard Penrose who was summoned to Parliament 33 Edward I., and who was the ancestor of the Penroses of Sithney.

Richard Penrose, of Sithney, was Sheriff of Cornwall in 1526. He died 19 January, 1542, and his son and heir, John Penrose, died in 1578, leaving a younger son, John Penrose, who married Nora, the daughter and heiress of John Tregetho, and was seated at Tregethon in Manaccan. From this latter branch came the Reverend Thomas Penrose, poet, who died in 1779, aged thirty-six years; and Sir Charles Vinicombe Penrose (second son of the Reverend John Penrose, Vicar of St. Gluvius), born at St. Gluvius, 20 June, 1759; died at Ethy St. Winnow, 1 January, 1830; midshipman on board H. M. frigate “Levant,” 1775; Lieutenant, August, 1779; Commander, April, 1794; Post-captain, 7 October, 1794; Commander of Sea Fencibles in the Padstow District, 1803–1810; Commodore at Gibraltar, 10 November, 1810; Colonel of Marines, 12 August, 1812, to 4 December, 1813; Rear-Admiral of the Blue, 4 December, 1813; K.C.B. January, 1816, and K.G.C. St. Michael and St. George. He was the author of several publications. His son was also in the Royal Navy, and his great-grandson is the present Sir Charles Penrose, K.C.B., born 1820; entered the Royal Marines 1837; Knight of the Bath 1867; Major-General 1877; Lieutenant-General 1878; General 1879; Knight-Commander of the Bath 1887.

The Reverend John Penrose, B.A., father of the Rear-Admiral above, was born at Exeter, 22 September, 1713, and died at St. Gluvius, 25 June, 1776. He was graduated at Exeter College, Oxford, 25 June, 1736, and was Curate of Malling, Kent; Curate of Shobrooke, Devon, Rector of Sowton, Devon, 1737, and Vicar of St. Gluvius, Cornwall, from September, 1741, until his death. His epitaph by the celebrated authoress, Hannah More, reads :

“If social manners, if the gentlest mind,
If zeal for God and Love for human kind;
If all the charities which Life endear,
May claim affection or demand a Tear,
Then Penrose o’er thy venerable Urn
Domestic Love may weep and Friendship mourn;
The path of Duty still untir’d he trod,
He walked with safety, for he walked with God.
When lost the Pow’rs of Precept and of Pray’r,
Yet still the Flock remained the Shepherd’s care.
Their Wants still nobly watchful to supply,
He taught his last, best Lesson, how to die.”

His eldest son, the Reverend John Penrose, was born at St. Gluvius, 15 August, 1753, and was graduated at Exeter College in 1774. He was Vicar of Fledborough in Nottinghamshire, where he died 14 September, 1829. The latter’s eldest son, also the Reverend John Penrose, third of the name, received the degree B.A. from Corpus Christi College, Oxford, 28 June, 1799; became Vicar of Cardinham, and later, Rector of Fledborough. He was a noted divine and the author of many pamphlets; also of a work entitled : "Lives of Vice-Admirals Sir Charles Vinicombe Penrose, K.C.B., and Captain James Trevenen, Knight of the Russian Orders of St. George and St. Vladimir." The life of the first-named, with portrait, occupied 180 pages of the work, while that of Captain Trevenen is compiled from a manuscript written by Admiral Penrose, who married, 2 January, 1787, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the Reverend John Trevenen, and sister of the captain.

In the seventeenth century the following of the name were graduated at Oxford :

George Penrose, Lincoln College, matriculated 13 November, 1658. One of this name was prebendary of Penell in Collegiate Church of Chumleigh, Devon, 1664.

John Penrose, armiger, Exeter College, matriculated 15 June, 1657.

Parmenas Penrose, son of William, of Holdsworth, Devon, Trinity College, matriculated 15 March, 1677, aged fifteen.

Thomas Penrose, son of Thomas, of Rose-Vedney, Cornwall, gentleman, Brasenose College, matriculated 13 March, 1639-40, aged eighteen.

William Penrose, son of Thomas, of Ludgevan, Cornwall, gentleman, Exeter College, matriculated 12 July, 1672, aged fifteen.

To the above college graduates may be added, Francis Penrose, son of Henry, of St. Anthony, Cornwall, gentleman, Exeter College, matriculated 21 April, 1702; aged sixteen; B.A. 1705; curate of St. Anthony in Meneage, and Vicar of St. Burian, Cornwall. His son, Francis Penrose, of Stonthorne, near Plymouth, and of Kestell in Manaccan, was an eminent surgeon who practiced many years at Bicester in Oxfordshire, where he married in 1741, Jane, daughter of Thomas Potter. He was a voluminous writer, mainly on topics pertinent to his profession. His son, James Penrose (1750-1818), was surgeon-extraordinary to the King.

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

The Penroses of Ireland—who bore for arms, argent, a bend azure between three roses gules; crest, a lion's head erased or, collared gules—descend from Robert Penrose, of Yorkshire, who was of Cornish extraction and who removed to Ireland in 1669. His son, Robert Penrose, born 1670, married Mary Clayton in 1695, and emigrated with part of his family to Chester County, Pennsylvania, in 1717. Later he settled in Richland, Montgomery County, where he founded the well-known Penrose family of that place.*

Bartholomew Penrose, to whose descendants this work is devoted, was undoubtedly of Cornish stock. His birthplace or his parentage has not been learned, but there is little doubt that, prior to coming to Philadelphia, he had resided at Bristol, England, and had there first engaged in the art of ship-building. He had a brother, Thomas Penrose, also a ship-builder, a man of wealth, and possessed of large landed estates, who resided some time at Clifton, and at his death, at Bedminster, across the river from the old city of Bristol, in which also he had an estate, as is shown by his last will and testament, dated 17 March, 1721, probated in the Prerogative Court on 27 June, 1722, by his widow and executrix. An abstract of it is as follows:

"I Thomas Penrose of the parish of Bedmister in Co. Somerset, shipwright.

"I give to my wife Elizabeth Penrose my manor or reputed manor and mansion house of Moreton in the said county, and all the lands, tenements &c. &c. thereto belonging lying in Moreton in the parish of Compton Martin in the said county, and my messuage and lands lying at a place called Rudgehill within the parish of Winford in the said county, in the holding of George Brocke my tenant; my toft or tenement called Pages tenement; my messuage and tenement called Sheppars with the lands thereto belonging and the parcel of ground called the Fifteen acres late Clarkes; my messuage called Sea Wall tenement, all which said last mentioned premises are in the parish of Kingston Seymour in the said county; and my parcel of ground called Hickes warth in the parish of Clevedon in the said county; my messuage called the White Heart lying near a place called the Lime Kilnes in the par. of Clifton and county of Gloucester; and the reversions and remainders of all the said premises: To

This Thomas Penrose was buried, according to Bedminster Church records, on 5 April, 1722, but no tombstone has been found. His son, Thomas Penrose, apparently his eldest, died without issue, and his will, dated 21 November, 1723, was probated in the Prerogative Court on 23 December following.

Romney Penrose, the other son of the first-named Thomas, appears in Foster's Alumni Oxienses thus: "Penrose, Rumney, son of Thomas of Clifton, co. Gloucester, gent. Merton College, matric. 17 October, 1717, aged 16. B. A. 1721, M. A. 1724." So he was born in 1701, and, from the entry as to his son, appears to have been a clergyman of the Church of England, who was residing in Bristol in 1749. The son appears in the said book thus: "Penrose, Rumney, son of Rumney of Bristol (city) clerk. Wadham College, matric. 26 May, 1749, aged 16. B. C. L. from St. John's Coll. 1756, and fellow, Rector of St. Ewen's, Bristol, 1762 until his death in 1786." He was also chaplain to the Earl of Northesk. Letters of administration on the estate of this Romney Penrose were granted 23 August, 1786, to Elizabeth Penrose, spinster, sister and only next of kin of said decedent.

James Penrose, brother of the emigrant to Pennsylvania, is probably the James Penrose of the City of Bristol, shipwright, who made his will dated 4 December, 1722, leaving all his property to his wife Elizabeth.

HISTORY OF THE PENROSE FAMILY OF PHILADELPHIA.

BARTHOLOMEW PENROSE,¹ the founder of the Penrose family of Philadelphia, was a native of England, and was engaged with his brother, Thomas Penrose, in the ship-building business, at Bristol, Gloucestershire, before coming to America. Much of the early trading between England and Philadelphia, was carried on from Bristol, and from that port sailed many of the ships which brought the early colonists to Pennsylvania. Bartholomew Penrose witnessed the departure and return of some of these ships, and from his intercourse with out-and-in-going passengers and sea-captains, and possibly William Penn himself (with whom he was no doubt personally acquainted), he came to possess much information concerning Penn's rising province in the New World. Availing himself of such information, and being young, enthusiastic, and of an adventurous spirit, he finally determined to quit Old England, and to emigrate to Pennsylvania, whither he came about A.D. 1700, making his settlement in Philadelphia.

Mr. Penrose doubtless came well provided with letters of recommendation and introduction, and with means, since he is found marrying, two or three years later (1703) the daughter of a wealthy and prominent citizen, and acquiring landed possessions. In 1705 he conveyed to Giles Green land on Front Street, where the most valuable real estate was situated, and which was described in the conveyance as bounded by other land belonging to Mr. Penrose. In March following (1706), he purchased of Edward Smout, merchant, a lot of land, containing in breadth one hundred and eight feet and in depth two hundred and fifty feet, situated on the street commonly called King Street, and on the banks of the Delaware River. In other words, a property at what is now Delaware Avenue and Market Street. For this property he paid two hundred and thirty pounds. Here he subsequently resided and carried on his business; and here, it is said, occurred a fire in which were lost, not only his own personal and early family records, but much valuable property. The estate so purchased remained in his family until 19 August, 1731, when his children sold and conveyed it to William Parsons, describing it as one hundred and eight feet in front, and depth two hundred and fifty feet to the river.

Mr. Penrose, soon after his settlement in Philadelphia, engaged there in shipbuilding. About 1706, he began the construction of a ship, known as the "Diligence," William Penn being a partner in such enterprise, as were, also, William Penn, Jr., James Logan, and that eminent Philadelphia merchant, William Trent. The first voyages of the ship were made to foreign parts, under the direct command of Mr. Penrose himself, and Penn's books of account, as kept by Logan, contain numerous entries relating to the business ventures of these voyages. Mention of the ship is also found in several of Logan's letters to Penn. In a letter dated 3 March, 1706-7, Logan writes: "I wrote thee in my former letter to get insured upon the ship Diligence, Barth. Penrose, master, burthen about 150 tons, to the value of £500 or £600 sterling. She is to be sent from hence to Virginia, there to load, and thence to England, with convoy, directly to London, if any offers; if not, then north about Scotland, and she ought to be insured from hence to Virginia, and thence as aforesaid." At the date of this letter, the construction of the ship had not been completed, although she had been named "Diligence." She was launched 4 May, 1707, on which day news of the union of the kingdoms of England and Scotland was received at Philadelphia, and, in honor of this event, she was christened "Happy Union." Logan in a letter to Penn, written the day after the launching, says: "Yesterday we had the certainty of the Union's being confirmed, and the same day was launched the ship I have mentioned to thee under the name of Happy Union; but her name Diligence will be retained in the register and bills of lading, to have such insurances as may be already made according to former directions. She may sail from hence to Virginia, we suppose in six weeks hence."

Logan's expectations of the early sailing of the "Diligence" were not realized, as it is learned from one of his later letters that she did not leave Virginia until 5 April, 1708, when she had as her convoy, the "London Merchant," and two other ships. The "London Merchant" was captured on her voyage by a French privateer, but the Diligence made a successful trip, and carried with her a remittance from Logan to Penn of over £500, and to the latter's son, £300. Her return to America was by the way of Barbadoes, as is learned from Penn's letter to Logan, dated 29 September, 1708, in which the former writes: "Samuel Vause has with acknowledgment of his fault, written largely to thee by way of the Barbadoes packet ship Diligence alias Union."

Mr. Penrose died at Philadelphia, and was buried, 17 November, 1711, in Christ Church ground, and probably under a part of the present church building. He was an Episcopalian, and his family long remained identified with Christ Church, two of

Will proved 7 January, 1711-12.

Bartholomew Penrose married, about 1703, Esther, daughter of Toby Leech, Esq.,* by his wife Esther Ashmead. Shortly

* TOBY or TOBIAS LEECH was a native of Gloucestershire, England, where the surname of Leech was an ancient one. He was a son of Tobias Leech, of Cheltenham, in that shire, and was baptized there, 1 January, 1652, and died in Cheltenham township, Philadelphia (now Montgomery) County, Pennsylvania, 13 November, 1726. He married, 26 December, 1679, Esther Ashmead, who died at the latter place, 11 August, 1726, aged sixty-six years. Toby Leech seems to have been brought up to the tanning business, as in early deeds in Pennsylvania he is styled "tanner." In 1682 he emigrated to Pennsylvania, accompanied by his family, and that of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Mary Ashmead. There is a tradition in the family that he came in the ship "Welcome" with William Penn, and this is possible, as, in less than a month after Penn's arrival, Mr. Leech is known to have been in Philadelphia, and to have then purchased from Penn two hundred and fifty acres of land. The tract so secured was located in what became Cheltenham township, and there Mr. Leech settled, the Ashmeads locating on an adjoining tract of equal size, the township deriving its name in honor of the English home of the Leeches and Ashmeads.

Mr. Leech was one of the substantial men among the early colonists, and he came to be one of the largest landed proprietors in the province. Upon his home plantation he erected a corn and fulling mill, the first constructed in that part of the province, and he there carried on the milling business in conjunction with farming. His first mansion house was destroyed by fire

The children of Bartholomew

Bartho Penrose

Penrose were probably born in the order given below, as they are named in this order in the will of their grandfather Leech. The son Thomas was not born at the date of his father's will, so is not named therein.

2. DOROTHY PENROSE,² born circa 1703; died 11 August, 1764; married Isaac Shoemaker.

in 1700, and the one built to take its place is still standing on Church Road east of the Old York Road, near the present (1903) Elkins Station, North Pennsylvania Railroad, and is one of the oldest houses in Pennsylvania. In 1713 he was elected a representative from Philadelphia County in the Provincial Assembly, and re-elected in 1714-1715, 1717, and 1719. Although his marriage was in Friends' Meeting, in later life, probably through the Keithian movement, he became an Episcopalian, and doubtless a founder of Trinity Church, Oxford, in the ancient graveyard of which he and his wife, and many of their descendants, are buried.

Mr. Leech was possessed of a large estate at his death, and by his will disposed of twenty-seven hundred acres of land, six hundred of which composed his home plantation. Besides two other plantations, of five hundred acres each, in Philadelphia County, he owned one of five hundred acres in Chester County, and one of six hundred acres in New Castle County, Delaware. He also owned a number of slaves, eight of whom are named in his will.

His eldest son, TOBY, JR., was a farmer, and died in March, 1727, leaving a widow and children.

JOHN, the second son, was a merchant in Philadelphia, and was buried at Christ Church, 25 December, 1745, leaving a widow and children.

THOMAS, the third son, was a prominent Philadelphia merchant, and one of the leading men of that city. He was clerk to the Assembly from 1723 until 1727; member of that body for twenty-five years, serving as speaker in 1758, and 1759; treasurer of Philadelphia County in 1757-8-9; trustee of the College of Philadelphia, now the University of Pennsylvania, from 1749 until his death, and was for thirty-two years a vestryman of Christ Church, and for five years one of its wardens. He, with Isaac Norris and Edward Warner, composed the committee appointed by the legislature, to purchase the bell for the "State House," now the famous "Independence Bell." He died 31 March, 1762, leaving a widow and children. His son, Captain Thomas Leech, was a naval commander of the province, and was one of those chosen by the Continental Congress, 9 March, 1776, to sign the $4,000,000 bills of credit then ordered to be issued.

ISAAC, the fourth son of Toby Leech, Sr., received under his father's will, the greater part of the home plantation, and in 1741 was commissioned a justice of the peace. He died 10 December, 1744, leaving a widow and issue.

Captain JACOB, the youngest son, was an officer in the provincial army at the time of his death, 28 January, 1750. He also left a widow and issue.

4. BARTHOLOMEW PENROSE, JR.,² son of Bartholomew Penrose¹ by his wife Esther Leech, was born at Philadelphia, circa 1708; died there, 1 February, 1758, and was buried in the graveyard of Christ Church, with which parish his family was connected. In a deed dated 19 August, 1731, he is styled "eldest son and heir at law," and joined his brothers and sisters in conveying land inherited from their father.* He was a large landed proprietor, as is shown by the following advertisement from the "Pennsylvania Gazette" of 26 February, 1754:

"Philadelphia, February 26, 1754.

"To be lett by the subscriber, a good plantation, in the township of Passyunk, about four miles from this city, whercof forty acres is good drain'd meadow, and twenty acres choice upland; with a new house erected thereon, a large range on the unimprov'd part thereof, a stock of horses, cows, &c., and other impliments of husbandry, to be rented therewith, if suitable to the tenant.

Also to be let or sold on ground rent forever, one hundred and twenty-five acres of fine land, about half a mile distant from the above place, with a good house and barn &c., or any other part thereof exceeding five acres. Likewise to be sold, a tract of land, containing three hundred acres, in Bucks County, about sixteen miles from Philadelphia, bordering upon the line dividing Philadelphia from Bucks. The Southampton road runs through part of said tract. Any person inclining to purchase or rent any of the above said tracts of land may have a reasonable time of credit allowed them, by applying to the owner, BARTHOLOMEW PENROSE, near the Draw-bridge.

"N.B. Stolen or strayed away from the first mentioned place a chunky brown horse, has a black spot on one of his buttocks, about the size of a small hand. Any person producing the said horse to the said BARTHOLOMEW PENROSE, shall have twenty shillings reward."

He married, at Christ Church, 21 May, 1737, Mary, daughter of John Kirll.* Mr. Penrose was a merchant, but is styled "of Philadelphia, Gent," in a deed of 15 July, 1751, in and by which he and his wife conveyed sundry landed interests lately possessed by his wife's father, and formerly the estate of her grandfather, Joseph Kirll.†

23. JOSEPH PENROSE,³ born 1738; died 15 February, 1784.
24. SARAH PENROSE,³ born circa 1743; died 21 March, 1791; married Abraham Robinson, Esq.
25. MARGARET PENROSE,³ born 1744; died 3 April, 1801 unmarried and without issue.
26. WILLIAM PENROSE,³ buried 2 March, 1745-46.

* JOSEPH KIRLL, an English sea captain, settled in Philadelphia, about 1690. He married at St. Michael's Parish, Island of Barbadoes, Mary, daughter of John and Mary Brett, of that place. He was doubtless a member of the Society of Friends, as his marriage and the record of his death, as well as that of his wife, are found on the books of Friends' Meeting at Philadelphia. On 8 December, 1691, he purchased a tract of land on Front Street, Philadelphia, extending to the Delaware river, including a wharf and a house, and later purchased sundry other tracts of land, one of which was a tract of sixty-seven acres, known as Sidbrook Island, and another, a plantation of one hundred and five acres, in Passyunk township.

He died at Philadelphia, 24 September, 1704, and his wife Mary died there, 23 November, the same year. His will, dated 4 April, 1702, names wife Mary; children John, Brett, and Mary; sister Hannah Lefevre, and "her daughters Mary and Hannah"; sister Susan Cambridge in England, "and her children." His eldest son, John Kirll, was a merchant, and died in 1722. He married, and left surviving him an only child and heiress, Mary, who married Bartholomew Penrose. The second son, Brett Kirll, married, and left surviving him an only son and heir, Joseph Brett Kirll.

SECOND GENERATION.

Mr. Penrose was an Episcopalian, and was actively identified with Christ Church, and took a prominent part in the founding of St. Peter's Church—the second Episcopal church in Philadelphia. He signed the petition to the Penns asking for a lot of ground on which to build an edifice for the latter church, and when the lot, at Third and Pine Streets, was granted for that purpose, he was named in the deed of grant as one of the trustees of the property, but did not live to see the building erected.

He married, 21 October, 1731, Sarah, daughter of John Coats* by his wife Mary Heele. Mrs. Penrose died, 7 July, 1777, aged 63 years. She married (2) 1 March, 1763, Captain Lester Falkner, who died 8 August, 1766, and she married (3), 24 April, 1770, Anthony Duche.

lieutenant-colonel of the Fifth Pennsylvania Battalion, under Colonel Robert Magaw. This battalion was recruited under resolution of Congress of 9 December, 1775, for the term of one year. In June, 1776, it was ordered to New York, where it arrived later in that month, and immediately became employed in the construction of Fort Washington. The regiment later participated in the movements of the army in and about New York, but finally came to disaster, in November, 1776, at the capture of Fort Washington by the British. Prior to this event, however, Congress had taken notice of Colonel Penrose's merits as an officer, and promoted him to the colonelcy of the Tenth Pennsylvania Continental Line, which regiment was raised under a resolution of Congress, of 16 September, 1776. Colonel Penrose continued in such command until 7 March, 1777, when he tendered his resignation. He was a high-spirited man, and was moved to give up his commission because of what he deemed an injustice done him in a matter of rank, as appears from his letter, which reads:

"Philadelphia Barracks, March 7, 1777.

"Gentlemen: The Field Officers Rank being settled, and Colonel Johnston taking rank above me, who has not been appointed to a Regiment above Ten days, and most of the Council no that when I first came to Philadelphia from Camp, I offered to give the Regiment up to Colonel Johnston, and it was not excepted of—and now to be commanded by him, is what I cannot think of putting up with as an officer. You'll please to consider the Tenth Regiment as being without a Colonel. Gentlemen, I am much obliged to you for the honour you did me, in appointing me to the Regiment, in the beginning, and shall be ever acknowledg'd by your very humble servant.

"JOSEPH PENROSE.

Colonel Penrose was one of the pall-bearers at the funeral of Colonel Hazlett, and Captain Anthony Wayne Morris, who fell at the battle of Princeton. He was a man of considerable estate, and was ready to risk not only his life in the cause of Independence, but his estate as well, as is shown by his action just prior to his appointment at the head of the Tenth Pennsylvania

Continental Line. The State was at that time greatly in need of money to assist in the work of obtaining enlistments for her Continental regiments; and, to meet the exigency, a number of prominent citizens came forward and loaned money to the State, the terms of their subscriptions reading thus:

"We, the subscribers, anxious to promote the public service, and especially to recruit the line of this State with Soldiers to be raised during the War, do, in order to provide a Fund for that purpose, agree to lend to David Rittenhouse, Esquire, Treasurer of the State, the several sums of Money to our respective Names, to be repaid in the same specie of money as advanced by us, with interest." *

Colonel Penrose subscribed £1000 to the loan, there being but one larger subscription. He was a member of the Gloucester Fox Hunting Club, which organization he joined in 1768. He appears to have had the following his profession as surveyor, and filled several local offices. He was one of the first in his county to show a disposition to resist the acts of the British Ministry with force, and at the outbreak of the Revolution he became the leader in his county of that movement. He was chairman of the County Committee which proposed the resolutions condemning the course of the Ministry, adopted by the freemen of that county on 13 July, 1774, and was also chairman of the committee appointed to carry out the recommendations of the Assembly in reference to a military organization and non-importation agreement. He was a member of the Provincial Convention which met at Philadelphia in January, 1775, to encourage domestic manufactures, in anticipation of the effect of the non-importation of English goods, and he was the author of the proposition in May, 1775, that the freemen of Chester County should be organized for military purposes. In June he became a member of the Provincial Committee of Safety; in July a member of the Provincial Convention, and in October a member of the Committee of Correspondence. During the latter year he devoted much time to the study of works on the art of war, and to drilling such of his neighbors as he could inspire with his own feelings, and to raising a regiment for immediate service. In the latter work he was so successful that by the close of the year the ranks of the regiment were filled, and on the recommendation of the Committee of Safety he was, 3 January, 1776, appointed its colonel. During the spring of that year his regiment was sent with the other Pennsylvania regiments to reinforce the army in Canada under Generals Montgomery and Arnold, which had been repulsed at Quebec. He was engaged in the battle of Three Rivers, and, although wounded and defeated, he withdrew his troops creditably, and concentrated his forces at Ticonderoga, where he was ordered to assume charge. On 21 February, 1777, he was commissioned brigadier-general in the Continental Army, and joined the army under General Washington in New Jersey. During the summer of that year he was constantly on the alert, engaged in driving the enemy from that State, and his "bravery and good conduct" were publicly testified to by General Washington. At the battle of Brandywine he commanded a division, and was charged with the defence of Chadd's Ford, where he opposed the passage of the river by Baron von Knyphausen with the Hessians. After fighting all day he effected a successful retreat. General Wayne led the attack at Warren Tavern a few days later, and then had command of a flying detachment of 1,500 men, for the purpose of harassing the British rear; but he was attacked near Paoli by superior numbers on the night of 20 September. He quickly formed his division, and, while his right sustained a fierce attack, a retreat was directed by the left, and the whole formed again not far from the ground on which they were attacked. He was with the right wing at Germantown, and carried the position that was assigned to him to take, driving the enemy back more than two miles, when the Americans, having failed in their purpose, retreated. During the winter of 1777-78 he rendered valuable service in the work of supplying the army at Valley Forge, and in March, 1778, made a successful raid into the British lines, capturing horses, cattle, and other material. After the British evacuated Philadelphia, Wayne hung on their rear, realizing the truth of what had been said of him early in the war, that "where Wayne went there was a fight always; that was his business." At Monmouth, General Wayne was the first to attack, but was ordered to retreat by General Charles Lee. After Washington had assumed command, Wayne came up with his troops and gave victory to the Americans. Colonel Henry Monckton, perceiving that the fate of the conflict depended upon driving Wayne away or capturing him, led his troops in a bayonet charge, in which almost every British officer was killed, including the leader. After this the British fell back, and in the night silently retreated. During the summer of 1779, Washington organized a corps of light infantry, placing General

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

Wayne in command. Wayne's most distinguished single service was in the storming and capture of Stony Point, on 15 July, 1779, for which achievement Congress voted him a gold medal, and the thanks of that body, a similar testimonial being given him by the assembly of his native State.

On 1 January, 1781, 1,300 men of the Pennsylvania Line mutinied; but General Wayne, by his tact, arranged the matter peaceably, to the advantage of the government and the satisfaction of the troops. Soon afterward he was sent by Washington to join Lafayette, who was then operating against Lord Cornwallis in Virginia. At Jamestown Ford, the British appeared to be falling back to avoid Lafayette, and Wayne attacked by Lafayette's orders, but found that he was confronted by the entire British force. Unable to retreat, he at once charged the enemy, and fell back after disconcerting a projected manœuvre against Lafayette. This action at Green Springs on 6 July, 1781, demonstrated Wayne's great ability as a general, in that he turned almost a positive defeat into a success.

General Wayne was actively engaged in the investment and capture of Yorktown, where the first parallel was opened by him and General James Clinton with six regiments on 6 October, 1781, and five days later the second parallel was begun by the Pennsylvania and Maryland troops, covered by two battalions under the command of Wayne. In the attack on the 14th, he supported the French troops with his Pennsylvania regiments. After the surrender he was sent to join General Nathaniel Greene in South Carolina, and on doing so, was given command of a small force and sent to Georgia to rescue that State from the enemy. In this he was successful after a campaign of only a few weeks, in which he fought three battles, being victorious in each. His achievements here won for him the gratitude of the people of that State, and moved the legislature of Georgia to pass a resolution complimenting him on his campaign, and to appropriate 4000 guineas for the purchase of an estate for him in any part of the State he might select. General Wayne named the locality, and eight hundred and forty acres of land was secured to him.

When Charleston, South Carolina, was evacuated by the British, 14 December, 1782, General Wayne took possession of that city, which was the last military service he performed in the Revolutionary War. On 10 October, 1783, he was brevetted major-general, about which time he returned to Pennsylvania and resumed civil life.

In 1783 and 1784, General Wayne was a member of the Council of Censors, and from 1784 until 1786 was a member of the Assembly. In 1787 he was a member of the Convention called in Pennsylvania to ratify the Constitution of the United States, and was an active champion of its adoption. He was elected from Georgia to Congress, and served from 21 October, 1791, to 21 March, 1792, when his seat was contested and Congress declared it vacant, the House of Representatives declaring all the election proceedings void and ordering that a new election take place. General Wayne declined to be a candidate at the new election.

In April, 1792, General Wayne was appointed by President Washington commander-in-chief of the army of the United States, with the rank of major-general. His services from this time forward are thus recounted in the sketch of his life printed in "Appleton's Cyclopedia of American Biography":

"Certain of the Indian tribes of the northwest, instigated by the British, refused to cease hostilities after the peace of 1783, and previous attempts by Gen. Josiah Harmer and Gen. Arthur St. Clair at subjugating the savages had failed, Wayne collected an adequate force, and, conscious that failure in negotiating with the Indians would be followed by immediate hostilities on the frontiers, spent more than a year in drilling the troops and training them for the peculiar service for which they were required. In the autumn of 1793 he marched into the northwest, and near Greenville, Ohio, built a stockade which he called Fort Recovery. He pushed on during the following summer through the wilderness toward Maumee River, and at its junction with the Auglaize he built Fort Adams, as an intermediate post. In August he went down the Maumee with 1,000 men, and encamped near a British post at the foot of the Maumee rapids, called Fort Miami. Here Gen. Wayne, with a force ample to destroy the Indians in spite of British influence, offered them peace if they would lay down their weapons. On their refusal he advanced to the head of the rapids, and on 20 August, at Fallen Timbers, attacked and defeated the Indians. Almost all the dead warriors were found with British arms. After laying their country waste he moved up to the junction of St. Mary's and St. Joseph's rivers, where he built a strong fortification which he called Fort Wayne. He spent the winter in Greenville, where, on 3 August, 1795, was signed a treaty with the Indians, in which twelve tribes participated. A lasting peace followed, and a large territory was acquired by the United States. Wayne returned on a visit to Pennsylvania, and was appointed sole commissioner to treat with the Indians of the northwest, and to take possession of all the forts that had been held by the British in that territory; but, while descending Lake Erie from Detroit, he died from an attack of the gout. Although Washington called him 'prudent,' Wayne's unexpected success in perilous expeditions won for him his more popular appellation of 'Mad Anthony Wayne.' The title of 'Dandy Wayne' was also applied to him, owing to his constant attention to dress, and in one of his letters to Washington he expressed himself in favor of an elegant uniform and soldierly appearance in preference to poorly clad troops with a greater amount of ammunition. He was called 'Black Snake' by the Indians, perhaps because that reptile will attack any other species and rarely gets the worst of an encounter. After he defeated them in 1794 he was given the name of 'Wind' or 'Tornado,' because 'he was exactly like a hurricane, that drives and tears and prostrates everything before it.' His body was removed from Presque Isle in 1809 by his son, and buried in Radnor churchyard in his native county, where the Pennsylvania Society of the Cincinnati caused a marble monument to be erected, which was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies on 4 July of that year. His portrait was painted by Charles Wilson Peale and by John Trumbull."

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

After the death of his wife, General Wayne was reported to be engaged to the beautiful Miss Vining, of Delaware.

James Penrose. He was prominent in his day, and manifested a deep interest in public affairs. In 1761 he became a contributor to the Pennsylvania Hospital, and from 1786 until 1798 was one of the managers of that institution, and he is said to have been the founder of what are known in Philadelphia as the "Soup Houses," established for the supplying of soup to the poor.* On 5 April, 1762, England's declaration of war against Spain was formally proclaimed at Philadelphia, and the minutes of the Provincial Council of that date thus note the incident:

"At 4 o'clock His Honour, the Governor, being attended at his House by the Council, Mayor, Recorder, Alderman, Common Council, Sheriff, and his officers, &c., proceeded to the Court House, where the declaration of War against Spain was proclaimed, and the Governor's Proclamation read by the Secretary, with the usual solemnity, in the presence of a vast concourse of people."

Governor Hamilton's proclamation contained this item:

"And Whereas, His Majesty hath been pleased to order that Letters of Marque of Commissions to privateers be granted in the usual manner, to distress and annoy the Enemy, in their Settlements, Trade & Commerce, I do invite all his Majesty's subjects under my Government, to receive the Benefit

* "Thomas Penrose was the originator of what are now known as the 'Soup Houses,' or 'Kitchens,' that in winter supply soup and bread to the poor. While he still carried on his business of ship-building, occurred the most severe winter ever known up to that time (date forgotten), in Philadelphia. I cannot ascertain what year, but am under the impression it was in the last decade of the eighteenth century.

"Outdoor work was impossible, the river so deeply frozen over for many weeks (one account said months) that the 'wood shallops' from New Jersey and Delaware could not sail up the river with the necessary supply of firewood and charcoal. Anthracite was then unknown, and of course there was great suffering among the working classes and the very poor, who usually lived on charity. Mr. Penrose sympathized deeply with their misery, and on reflection, decided that the most effectual way of supplying food to the needy near his home at Penn and Shippen Streets, was to have the great glue kettle used in his shipyard thoroughly cleansed, and a large quantity of what in old times was called 'a good stomachy soup' prepared daily in his shipyard. It was made of fresh and some salt meat, potatoes, beans, a few onions, dry bread crumbs, little dough balls, plenty of seasoning and pot-herbs, and a good portion of this with a suitable ration of brown bread was regularly served to his suffering neighbors with most satisfactory results. But of course no one person could supply all the needy, so others followed his example, the public Soup House of the old District of Southwark was started, and having finally closed his shipyard about that time, he presented the big glue kettle to that institution, and I know that for many years after his decease that substantial piece of ironmongery was used for several months every winter, to the great satisfaction of his only surviving son, Charles Penrose." † of this His Majesty's order, by fitting out such Privateers, which may not only be greatly for his Majesty's service, but very advantageous to the adventurers themselves, and I do hereby declare that I will most readily give all the Encouragement & Assistance that in me lyes, to every such undertaking." *

Four days after the proclamation, Thomas and James Penrose began the construction of a warship, with a keel of ninety-five feet and beam of thirty-two feet, and in seventy-two days the vessel was launched. She was named "Hero," and put in command of Samuel ap Owen, with a crew of two hundred men, and an armament of twenty-four nine-pounders, and went forth against the Spanish, capturing several prizes.

In 1765 Mr. Penrose became one of the signers to the historic "Non-Importation Agreement," and in 1766 he was chosen one of the port wardens of Philadelphia, which position he held until the Revolution. On 19 May, 1774, the famous Paul Revere, of Boston, arrived in Philadelphia, bringing the news of the passage by Parliament of the bill closing the port of Boston and asking support from Philadelphia for the people of the former city. A call was issued for a public meeting, at the City Tavern on the following evening, which was attended by a large number of patriotic citizens. John Dickinson, author of the "Farmer's Letters," was made chairman of the meeting, and a committee of correspondence, of which Thomas Penrose was a member, was appointed to write to the people of Boston assuring them of sympathy, commending their firmness, declaring their cause that of the colonies, and promising to stand fast for the right. The committee took immediate action in such direction, and later, arranged for a mass-meeting at the "State House Yard" (Independence Square), on 18 June, 1774. The meeting was attended by some eight thousand citizens. John Dickinson and Thomas Willing presided, and the meeting selected a new committee on correspondence, with practical functions of large importance. Mr. Penrose was made a member of the committee, composed of forty-three of the leading men of Philadelphia. One of the first steps taken by the committee was towards calling a convention composed of delegates elected in the several counties of the Province. Such convention,—a noted one in the history of Pennsylvania,—met at Carpenter's Hall, Philadelphia, 15 July, following, and remained in session six days. Mr. Penrose was a member of this body, and was continued on the Committee of Correspondence until 5 January, 1775, when it was succeeded by the Council of Safety.

Miss Annie Eliza Pennock, of Philadelphia, a great-granddaughter of Thomas Penrose, has furnished the author with the following interesting story:

"While the British and Hessian troops occupied Philadelphia (1777-78), the Chaplain of a Hessian regiment was quartered in the house of Thomas Penrose, at southeast corner of Penn and Shippen (now Bainbridge) Streets, to the intense dismay of the family, especially his very neat wife, a notable housekeeper of the old-fashioned sort. She fully believed, as did all the Philadelphians, even the Tories, that in manners and customs the Hessians were as 'dreadful as wild beasts, if not worse, because they used what little brains they had to invent even worse sayings and doings than came instinctively into their dirty, ugly heads.' (Quoted from contemporary letter.) But to the great relief of the household, the Chaplain—his name is now forgotten and cannot be ascertained—proved to be a civilized and very worthy gentleman, who gave no trouble, and protected them from the constant abuse and plundering of other citizens by the thievish Hessian and English soldiers. The latter, though bad enough, and much feared, were not nearly so much dreaded as the brutal Hessians. His sympathy was soon warmly roused by the courage and suffering of the 'American rebels,' though he dared not let Count Donop and other Hessian and English commanders know that, and by the time the royal troops left Philadelphia, and he was obliged to go with them, a warm friendship had grown up between him and Mr. and Mrs. Penrose. He was lodged in the second-story front chamber of Thomas Penrose's house at Penn and Shippen Streets, and received there all visitors, friends or strangers, 'so that they might not discommode the family.' Among them were more than a hundred couples (chiefly of the plain people, but some of the better class) who arrived to be married. They came to him because all the patriotic clergy had fled from the city, likewise most of the civil magistrates, and many people would not be united by the hated royalist (Tory) parsons and 'squires.' He corresponded with Mr. Penrose after returning to Germany until his death a few years later, and my grandfather, Charles Penrose, then a child, could remember hearing his parents say his letters were written in very good English, and so 'hearty and friendly.' Unfortunately they were accidentally destroyed a few years after the war was over. Great was the joy when the English and Hessian troops finally sailed away from Philadelphia, and the American soldiers marched in. The citizens, among them Thomas Penrose and Nancy Dowding his wife, with all their relations and friends could once more enjoy their homes, and bring forth their valuables from some very queer hiding-places. I have often heard that on a sudden alarm in the city (a false report that English troops and their savage Indian allies were very near) Mrs. Thomas Penrose had her silver tea service (we still have some of it) buried deep under a bed of 'kitchen or pot herbs,' planted purposely in a flower-bed in the garden on the south side of the Penn Street house. Valuable papers, silver spoons, and other small pieces were cautiously packed among the works of the tall old English-made eight-day clock now in my house, and still an excellent timepiece, substantial enough to last another one hundred and fifty years—it was brought from England in 1752 or '53, for Thomas and Nancy (or Ann) Dowding Penrose, his wife.'

Miss Pennock has also furnished the following item, relating to the ship "Thomas Penrose," of which Mr. Penrose was a part owner:

"When the time came to launch and name the ship it was ascertained that Thomas Willing, the eminent merchant, and other owners of the vessel, had employed the eminent wood-carver, William Rush, to carve a life-size bust of Mr. Penrose, which they quietly secured to the ship's bow just before she was slid down the ways into the Delaware. Mr. Penrose was indignant over the bust, although it was an excellent likeness of him. The ship proved a fast sailer, and traded for a time between Philadelphia and European ports, but after a few years it was captured by the French, in the short war late in the eighteenth century between France and the United States. She was pierced for cannon, named after a French Admiral, the drab coat and vest, copied from the usual attire of Mr. Penrose, painted the naval blue of the French Republic, a pair of gilt epaulettes secured on the shoulders, and she became a very successful French privateer, but was finally captured by an English frigate, while cruising in the English channel, and sailed as an English privateer, still retaining her French name. Some time after the battle of Waterloo she was sold by the English government to a private firm. About 1840, Mr. Charles Penrose, a son of Thomas Penrose, learned that the ship was still in use, and still staunch and sound, and a fast sailer, and, remembering that the portrait bust figure head was always considered a good likeness of his father, he made an effort, it is said, to recover the same, but was a few months too late, for the ship had been damaged beyond repair in a collision at sea, and broken up for old timber, and the figure-head could not be found."

Mr. Penrose was identified with St. Peter's Episcopal Church until his widowed mother married Anthony Duché, a relative of the Episcopal divine, Reverend Jacob Duché, which marriage, it is said, led Mr. Penrose to discontinue his attendance at that Church, and to attend Friends' Meeting, although he never became a member of the Society of Friends. His pew at St. Peter's Church continued in the family until a recent date. He was a man of wealth, and left a large estate.

Mr. Penrose married (ceremony by Reverend Michael Schlatter), 7 July, 1757, Ann, daughter of Joseph Dowding, Esq., by his wife Ann Richardson; born 7 September, 1739; died 8 September, 1809. Mr. Dowding* was a lawyer, and

Hon^{ed} & Dear Mother

Your two Letters which Inform me of My Dear Brother Sandys and Sister Rebeccah's Deaths, I rec^d. I had heard the melancholy news of both before ye rec^d of your Letters, And have been often full of Greif upon the Occasion. God has been pleased since to add to my Affliction by depriving me of a most dear & Virtuous Consort, who the 27th of January last was a year, Departed this life, occasioned by her miscarriage being abo^t 5 months gone with Child. We were married almost four Years before. She was a Vertuous & Religious, Modest & Ingenious, kind and Affectionate young woman abo^t 30 Years of Age, & Truly Amiable both in Body and Mind, and having for weeks before some Premonition & Apprehension of her approaching End. She bore her Affliction wth great Patience, & with Humble Resignation & Composure, yeilded up her Spirit, into the Hands of the Father of Mercies in hopes of his acceptance for the alone Merits of her Saviour. I trust she is happy! She left Behind her a Good Name, and one Dear Daughter named Ann, who will be Four Years old if she lives till the 7th of Septem^r next. She is a fine fair Child much resembling her Mother both in Feature & Temper. The Lord sanctifie these and all our other Afflictions with which he is pleased to exercise us to our Spiritual Benefit that we may be the better prepared to follow them to the Eternal State when Our God shall please.

Blessed be his Name that I & my little Dau^r are in good health, tho' I am often indisposed by the unwholesomeness of the climate and the fatigues. M^r. Timothy Hansom on his return home. he is my Good Friend and Acquaintance, with whom I boarded Several Years before I married & he has promised to call & see you with this. Please to let me know how my Dear Mother and Sisters do & what Children they have &c. I should take a letter kindly from any of them. To all whom I desire most affectionately to be remembered the Lord Support you, Comfort and direct you, Strengthen your Faith & Confirm your hope and at last bring you & yours—to y^e Heavenly City—where is neither Sin nor Sorrow, but Imortal Bliss! & Eternal peace and Joy! These shall be my Dailey prayers!—I cannot express the Tender and Affectionate Sentiments with which my Breast is filled, at this as well as at other times on your Account.

31. JAMES PENROSE,³ son of Thomas Penrose² by his wife Sarah Coats, was born at Philadelphia, 23 February, 1737-38; died there, 7 September, 1771. He was a ship-builder and a shipping merchant, in co-partnership with his brother Thomas, and, like him, became a signer of the famous "Non-Importation Agreement," and a contributor to the Pennsylvania Hospital. Miss Annie Eliza Pennock, the grand-niece of James Penrose, thus writes of him: "He was a very handsome man, with the courtly manners of the 'old school,' fond of society, hospitable and generous, hot-tempered, but very popular, and always retained the good-will of friends and neighbors, notwithstanding frequent outbursts of temper." His death is thus noted in the "Pennsylvania Gazette" of 12 September, 1771:

"On Saturday last—died, in the 34th year of his age, Mr. JAMES PENROSE, an eminent Ship-builder. A man of great Ingenuity and abilities in his Profession, of universal Esteem among all that knew him, and particularly respected by all who were intimate with him. His remains, attended by a vast concourse of respectable inhabitants, of all Denominations, were interred on Sunday evening in Friend's Burying Ground."

He married, 15 March, 1766, Sarah, daughter of John Biddle by his wife Sarah Owen, and a descendant of Honorable William Biddle.* She married (2), 15 August, 1776, John Shaw; (3) Rudolph Tillier; and died 24 October, 1794.

* WILLIAM BIDDLE was one of the early proprietors of West Jersey, and was prominent in the founding of that Province. He was born in England, about 1630, and in 1681 emigrated, with his family, to West Jersey, having previously acquired there large landed rights. He was a Quaker, and was persecuted in England on account of his religious faith. At the time he emigrated he was a resident of London, and on his arrival in America he settled at what is now Kingora, about midway between Burlington and Bordentown, New Jersey, where he took up a plantation of five hundred acres on the mainland, and two hundred and seventy-eight acres, the area of an adjacent island, which has since borne the name of Biddle's Island. To this plantation Mr. Biddle gave the name of "Mount Hope."

Mr. Biddle was one of the leading men in the early public affairs of the province, and, in 1682, at the organization of the first governor's council, he became a member of that body, and was also commissioned one of the justices of the peace for Burlington County, and a member of the board of Land Commissioners. He was re-elected to the Council in 1683, 1684, and 1685, and again, in 1701, and during the years 1683, 1684, 1685, 1687, and 1697, he was a member of the Assembly. He was, also, re-commissioned a justice of the peace in 1683, and many years thereafter.

At a meeting of the proprietors of West Jersey, held 14 February, 1687, it was decided to appoint eleven of their number "Commissioners and Trustees" to conduct the business of the proprietors. Mr. Biddle was chosen a member of this board, called the "Council of the Proprietors," and was annually re-elected for many years, being the president of the Council in 1706 and 1707.

In 1703, the provinces of East and West Jersey were united under the name and style of New Jersey, and Mr. Biddle was elected a member of the first Assembly under the government thus formed.

He married in London, England, in February, 1666, Sarah Kemp, who died at her husband's seat, "Mount Hope," 27 April, 1709 in the seventy-fifth year of her age. Mr. Biddle died there, in the early part of 1712, leaving two children: William and Sarah. The latter married (1), William Righton, of Philadelphia; (2), Honorable Clement Plumsted, who was three times mayor of Philadelphia. By his will, Mr. Biddle disposed of over fourteen hundred and seventy-eight acres of land, he being one of the largest landed proprietors in the Province.

WILLIAM BIDDLE, JR., son of Honorable William Biddle by his wife Sarah Kemp, was born in London, England, 4 December, 1660, and came to America with his parents in 1681. Under his father's will he acquired "Mount Hope," and there resided until his death. He appears neither to have sought nor held public office, except that in 1703 he was one of the commissioners chosen by the Council of Proprietors of West Jersey, "to secure a survey and deed from the Indians of land above the Falls," which land had been purchased from the latter. He married, 13 December, 1691, Lydia Wardell, of Shrewsbury, New Jersey, the ceremony being performed by Lewis Morris, Esq., a justice of the court of Monmouth County, New Jersey. She was a daughter of Eliakim Wardell by his wife Lydia Perkins, and granddaughter of Thomas Wardell, who was living in Boston, Massachusetts, as early as 1634, subsequently removing to Piscataqua, New Hampshire, where he was commissioned a magistrate in 1643, under the Massachusetts

THIRD GENERATION.

Mr. Tillier was a native of Berne, Switzerland, where his family occupied a high social position. He was a man of wealth, and invested largely in lands in various parts of America. In 1788 he went to Europe, to visit his relatives in Switzerland, taking with him his wife, and his stepson, Clement Biddle Penrose. Mrs. Tillier's letters to her family, describing her travels and her stay in Europe, are most interesting. One of them, written at Berne, 20 January, 1789, and addressed to her father, and to her aunt Mary Biddle, reads:

"I refer my much lov'd and Honord Father to my general letter for an account of our voyage & the reception our family gave us, which was as affectionate as we could wish, & indeed we have had more attention from every body than was agreeable to either of us.

"We viewed everything—to satisfie Clement—that Mr. Tillier thought most curious & our short stay would admit. What pleased me most, was the Gobeling, the Hospital of Invalids & the building of the former Military school for Noblemen, begun by Lewis the 14th. At the Gobelins they are weaving Tapestry for the King's Palace. The Shades are equal to any painting in the world. The figures as large as life. One apartment is the History of Queen Hester, the others are Roman pieces. They have been three years at work on this & it is not half finish'd, but will exceed anything of the kind when completed. The same day visited the Hospital; the structure of the dome in the chapel, is superb & magnificent beyond description of my feeble pen. The silence that reigned in this spacious building, four or five old soldiers at private prayer, the grandeur of the architecture & painting, struck us with reverential government. By his wife, Lydia Wardell, William Biddle, Jr., had six children, to wit: William, Elizabeth, Sarah, Penelope, Joseph, and John.

JOHN BIDDLE, the youngest son of the above-named, was born in 1707, and in early life settled in Philadelphia, where he died in 1700, and where he married, 3 March, 1736, Sarah, daughter of Owen Owen, Esq., high sheriff of Philadelphia County from 1726 until 1729, and coroner of that county from 1729 until 1741. Mrs. Biddle died at Philadelphia, 1 January, 1773. They had five children, namely: Owen, Clement, Sarah, Ann, and Lydia. COLONEL OWEN BIDDLE, the eldest son, was a prominent Philadelphian, and filled a conspicuous position in that city during the Revolution, being a member of Committee of Safety, the Pennsylvania Board of War, and Commissary-General of Forage. He was for over forty years a member of the American Philosophical Society, serving nine years as its Secretary, and seventeen years as a councillor. COLONEL CLEMENT BIDDLE, the youngest son, was also a prominent Philadelphian, and during the Revolution he served as deputy-quartermaster-general of the Continental Army, and became the first Marshal of the United States in Pennsylvania, to which he was appointed by President Washington, with whom he was on terms of intimate friendship. SARAH BIDDLE, the eldest daughter, married James Penrose, as mentioned in the text. ANN BIDDLE, the next daughter, married General James Wilkinson, of Revolutionary fame, and who later commanded the army of the United States. LYDIA BIDDLE, the youngest daughter of John Biddle, married Dr. James Hutchinson, a noted surgeon of the Revolutionary army.

awe, of the great ruler of the universe, that poor lame mortals were addressing. The Military School is beautifully situated, a very grand building and paintings; The stairs ornamented with the statues of the greatest men of different ages. I was taken ill of an epidemic disorder that raged in Paris, & insisted on setting off, being sure that fresh air was the only thing to restore me & prevent my belov'd husband & son taking the same disorder, but it was too late, they had recd the infection & was ill a few days after. Notwithstanding there are so many grand edifices gardens and everything you can wish for but pure air, Paris is the dirtiest place in the world. The streets are narrow in general, the houses 4 & 5 stories high & the streets constantly muddy. I will do justice to its inhabitants in saying I never saw people behave at a public place with so much delicacy & true politeness as the Parisians.

"Clem was very ill on our journey, but as I recovered & could let him lay on my lap, & he was better when travelling, we concluded to proceed on our journey. Mr. T. had the disorder lighter than either of us. We travelled through France in the height of the vintage. The roads were crowded with people loaded with grapes, & each one wore a face of contentment & plenty. Some were gathering, others loading waggons & baskets, singing bowing and curtesying to us for three hundred miles through Champagne, Burgundy and part of French Compt. The roads are paved like our street, trees on each side through Champagne, handsomely trimm'd & vineyards on the side of the road. The fields are not enclosed, except Gentlemens seats with a hedge round the houses. Shepherds keep their flock, & tho not of the Arcadian kind, I wish'd, sick as I was, very much lov'd aunt for your pen to do justice to the countries I pass'd through.

"We now approached the mountains. That of Saline was the first. I thought when near the top that it was too high to be inhabited but found a large well built Town, where the principal Salt Works of France are carried on. In travelling through France you see a great number of thack'd villages as well as well built Towns. We travelled for half a day between two ridges of mountains; had at the same time the view of a dozen ridges inhabited on the sides & many castles on the tops of the mountains, which appeared inaccessible. The road is cut in the side of the mountains wide enough for two carriages to pass. If you look up it is perpendicular five hundred feet, and cast your eyes below on the steep descent it is twice the highth of the Minesink by Reading, & terrifying to behold. Here I was certain of no Inhabitants, but after Ascending six Miles found several farms on the very Summit of the Mountain. We traveled from Mountain to Mountain till we reached the borders of Switzerland, here our name was known at every Inn & great respect paid us, but we soon found the difference of the French & Swiss Public House, the one very dirty & bad entertainment except at large Town, the Swiss were clean a good dish of tea Excellent provision & beds. Clem recovered as soon as he smelt the Air of Switzerland, which pleased his Papa very much. We remained two days at New Chattel. This place is call'd Switzerland, but is only in Allioime. It belongs to the King Prussia with liberty to form their own laws. The Town is built on several eminenc's. The buildings are handsome, and a place of great Trade. It is situated on the side of a large Lake, the best Vine Country we saw. Berne is a very beautiful situation, a kind of Peninsula. The River R runs on the north & south side, this river is about the width of Grey's Ferry, but a more rapid stream. It is a fortified Town, has four entries with double Gates & Centinals constantly at them. Their uniform Red & blue & Red twin'd up with black, which gives them the appearance of British. The streets are broad, extremely Clean with fountains in the Middle of each street & a stream of water running through them. The houses are built of stone, the second story projects over the first & is supported by arches, that you may allways walk dry. There are at the end of the East principal Public Walks that are laid out in grass plots, with trees & green seats, the shape of sofas. It is built on a hill which is wal'd & below the walls are hanging gardens. On the bank of the R it appears another Town. We are so much higher there. The washer women, hatters, diers &c. live. From the south side we have a full view of the glassiers & neighboring hills which are a great distance off. The most noble sight the imagination can paint is the Glasiers appearing above the Clouds. The sun will shine at the top when they are covered with thick Clouds half way down. How often my belov'd Father & aunt do I wish you at this place. My Father was form'd for it. The Old Gentlemen go to the Coffe house at 3 oc. play a party at cards, have the best of eating, return to supper at 8 o'clock, dine at one, & we never have the house wash'd. This would be the very thing for my Belov'd Father. I must instruct you how to clean floors, rub them with soft stone cutters stone dry, sweep it off & take wet saw dust rub it on with a hard broom & sweep that off. I never saw such beautiful white floors as we have & this is the Method of Cleaning them. Dont know the use of a house Cloth. If water is spilt they throw saw dust on it & sweep it off. My hand is so numb'd I can hardly hold my pen, therefor must leave off & request my Father to send this letter to aunt Biddle. With affc love to my dear Cousin L. M. P. B. W. B. & all the family, shall write soon to them all. My afft love to L. Spencer, the Miss Cliftons, & Mrs. Beach. Intend writing to them all. Adieu my much lov'd Father and Aunt. May Heavin continue you as blessing to your Family, & may you not forget the Child & neice that loves you sincerely tho distant Hills & seas divide us, her heart is with you. My brother often asks me to tell you he will bring us to pay you & my lov'd much lov'd sister & brother Wilkinson a visit. Tho I write in extreme pain cannot leave off. May you enjoy health to answer our letters is my fervent prayer.

33. SAMUEL PENROSE,³ son of Thomas Penrose² by his wife Sarah Coats, was born at Philadelphia, 11 November, 1742; died there in 1796. He was one of the founders of the First Troop of Philadelphia City Cavalry (now known as the "First City Troop"),—the first military body organized in Pennsylvania in connection with the Revolutionary War. The Troop was formed in Philadelphia on the evening of 17 November, 1774, and those who then joined it were representatives of the families of respectability and wealth of Philadelphia. In 1777 he became Quartermaster Sergeant of the Troop, and served as such to the close of the Revolution, and in 1786 his name was placed on the honorary roll. He was elected a member of the Provincial Convention which met at Philadelphia, 23 January, 1775, and continued by adjournments, from day to day, to the 28th of that month. This was the most eminent body of men that had, up to that date, assembled in Pennsylvania. In 1780, at a critical stage of the Revolution, Mr. Penrose was one of the ninety-two patriotic Philadelphians who came forward and organized the "Pennsylvania Bank," which institution was formed for the purpose of securing capital with which to furnish supplies to the Continental Army. The capital of the Bank was £300,000, of which Mr. Penrose subscribed £1000. In 1781, 1782, and 1783, he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania Assembly. Mr. Penrose was a merchant, and in the later years of his life he is styled "Gent" in conveyances of land. He was an Episcopalian, and had a pew in St. Peter's Church.

36. ISAAC PENROSE,³ son of Thomas Penrose² by his wife Sarah Coats, was born at Philadelphia, 1 March, 1746-47; died there, 16 January, 1784. He appears to have married after 29 September, 1771, the date of his will, as in the same no mention is made of either wife or children. His daughter Harriet, in her will of 25 February, 1800, named "brother" Isaac, and "sister" Frances. Mr. Penrose was a hatter. He married (1) Cassandra Hall, of Maryland, who was buried in Christ Church burying-ground, 4 September, 1781; (2) Ann, who married for second husband, Jonathan Hutcheson. The two eldest children were by the first marriage, and the youngest, by the second.

* PLUNKET FLEESON was of Irish parentage, but is said to have been born in Philadelphia in 1712. On 1 January, 1747-48, he was commissioned ensign in one of the companies of the "Associated Regiment of Foot of Philadelphia." He was a member of the Pennsylvania Assembly in 1762 and 1763; signed the "Non-Importation Agreement" in 1765, and 28 March, 1777, was commissioned a justice of the courts of Philadelphia, and, 18 November, 1780, was commissioned a judge of the Court of Common Pleas, of which he was president judge for some years. He was active in furthering the cause of the Revolution and in 1776, he loaned the State £500 to raise recruits for the army. He married (1), circa 1740, Catharine, who was buried in Christ Church graveyard, 13 December, 1752. He married (2), 16 June, 1753, Martha Linton, probably a widow. Judge Fleeson died at Philadelphia, in August, 1791. In his will he names, among others, "son-in-law" Samuel Penrose and "granddaughter" Sarah Penrose.

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

38. JONATHAN PENROSE,³ son of Thomas Penrose² by his wife Sarah Coats, was born at Philadelphia, 10 July, 1752; died there, 1 April, 1801, and was buried in Christ Church burying-ground. He became a prominent citizen. Shortly after the First Troop Philadelphia City Cavalry was organized, he enlisted in that body, and was in active service with it on several occasions, particularly during the campaign of the winter of 1776-77, which culminated in the battle of Princeton. The Troop won distinction in the campaign, and at its close was discharged by General Washington in the following complimentary order:

"The Philadelphia Troop of Light Horse, under command of Captain Morris, having perform'd their Tour of duty, are discharged for the present—

"I take this Opportunity of returning my most sincere thanks to the Captain and to the Gentlemen who compose the Troop, for the many essential services which they have rendered to their Country, and to me personally, during the Course of this severe campaign. Tho' composed of Gentlemen of fortune, they have shewn a noble Example of discipline and subordination, and in several actions have shewn a spirit of Bravery which will ever do Honor to them and will ever be gratefully remembered by me.

"Given at Head Quarters at Morristown this 23d Jany. 1777.

"Go. WASHINGTON."

In Richard Peters' account book, page 33, mention is made of Jonathan Penrose as one of a party of six volunteers, who, in the campaign just referred to, entered the enemy's lines at Trenton to secure particular information for the Commander-in-Chief. Upon their return, after securing the desired information, they surprised a party of the enemy, and captured eleven light dragoons, whom they drove at the point of their pistols into camp, being so closely pursued, however, that Penrose had to take his prisoner on his horse before him to save himself from capture. For this act of bravery General Washington is said to have personally complimented young Penrose.

Mr. Penrose remained an active member of the Troop until

THIRD GENERATION.

10 September, 1787, when his name, and that of his brother, Samuel Penrose, who had been Quartermaster of the Troop, was placed on the Honorary Roll.

Jacob Hiltzheimer, in his "Journal," makes the following mention of Mr. Penrose :

"5 Sept. 1781. General Washington left for the southward. Jonathan Penrose has charge of the wagons that transport the cannon to head of Elk.

"17 Aug. 1784. Mr. Geyer and I set the teams to work on New Water Street. Jonathan Penrose took us home with him, and gave us a drink of punch. We were told that he was recently elected a magistrate of Southwark."

Mr. Penrose resided in the district of Southwark, and at about the date last mentioned he was elected one of the justices of the peace for the County of Philadelphia, in which capacity he served several years. In 1798 he was elected High Sheriff of the County, and held such position at his death. Mr. Penrose was a large landowner. On 1 July, 1784, he received a warrant for four hundred acres in Northumberland county, and on the 6th of the same month a warrant for four hundred acres in Cumberland county. Early in life he became a member of the Gloucester Fox Hunting Club.

Miss Annie Eliza Pennock has contributed the following item relating to Jonathan Penrose:

"He was said to be very lively and companionable, and in his youth was somewhat given to ridiculing foolish and pretentious people. His brother Thomas sometimes reproved him for his 'too great liking for hunting and hospitality,' and on one occasion when so reproved, he replied: 'Tommy, if I had your money, I would make the stones of Southwark rattle under me till they waked the dead.'

"During the latter years of his life he owned an old-fashioned country house on the 'Banks of Schuylkill,' a pretty wooded bluff on the east side of that river, beginning not very far below Gray's Ferry, and continuing some distance until the road on the banks descended, near the Hamburg Tavern, to the flat meadows of the 'Neck.' He and his amiable wife were renowned for their delightful entertainments there, especially in 'strawberry time' and 'watermelon and peach season.' His town house was in Front Street, below Almond, in the old district of Southwark, a quaint, old-fashioned edifice, entered through a small garden on the south side. The main door was between the parlor, fronting on the street, back of it, hall and staircase, and next, the sitting and dining room. During the Revolution a dissipated, worthless English officer was quartered on them, who brought a disreputable woman to the house. Mrs. Penrose and her children were compelled to leave, and the English couple almost destroyed the house and its contents by their 'riotous ill living.' When the English Army evacuated Philadelphia in 1778, they stole everything portable, among other articles a parlor mantle mirror, 'real French, bevelled edges, carved frame adorned with gilded work.' Of course it was small compared with the large mirrors of our time, but was much admired and thought most 'elegant and uncommon.' The English officer in charge of the baggage wagons refused to carry it to the ship on which they sailed away, and the woman, 'very drunk at the time on wine and liquors stolen from Mr. Penrose's cellar, fell into a horrible rage, and swore like a drunken trooper' that no American lady 'should ever again have as much pleasure in gazing at herself in the mirror as she had enjoyed,' made her captain drag it to the floor, and then danced on the glass with her high-heeled shoes till it was in splinters, and he smashed the frame. On returning to town, Mrs. Penrose found her once neat and comfortable home too much damaged and filthy to live in until thoroughly cleansed and repaired, a very difficult and costly work in the bare and demoralized city. Mrs. Jonathan Penrose's father was a cousin of the famous Irish patriot, Hamilton Rowan, and when the latter fled to this country after the defeat of the Irish Rebellion led by Robert Emmet, Lord Edward Fitzgerald and others, he settled in a little cottage in Delaware, I believe in or near Wilmington (one account says Newcastle), was for a time in great poverty, and compelled to open a dyeing and fulling establishment. He was there visited by Dr. John Rowan, son of Thomas. Dr. John Rowan was then settled in Salem, N. J., practicing medicine. He learned, on visiting Hamilton Rowan, that the real name of the latter was 'Rowan Hamilton,' son of a Scotch-Irish gentleman of that name, but he changed his name by act of the then existent Irish Parliament, as he wished to marry his cousin, Jane Rowan, a great heiress, who, under the express terms of her father's will, would have forfeited her large estate unless she always retained the name of Rowan, even if married. Hamilton Rowan was acknowledged to be the handsomest and most agreeable and accomplished gentleman in Ireland, his wife was equally attractive, and their lives were prosperous and most happy until the ruin following the Irish Rebellion. I should here mention that Mr. Hamilton's mother was a Miss Rowan, and that the family claimed kinship with the celebrated French and Austrian families 'De Rohan.'"

He married, 8 November, 1775, Ann, daughter of John Rowan by his wife Margaret Sharp*; born 1 December, 1758; died 19 June, 1843.

*MARGARET SHARP had first married Thomas Hill, who died in 1741. She was a daughter of Colonel Isaac Sharp by his wife Margaret Braithwaite. Colonel Sharp was a son of Anthony 172. Colonel ISAAC WAYNE,⁴ only son of Major-General Anthony Wayne by his wife Mary Penrose,³ was born at his father's seat, "Waynesborough," Chester County, Pennsylvania, in 1768; died there, 25 October, 1852. He was educated at Dickinson College, and after graduating at that institution, he studied law at Philadelphia, under William Lewis, Esq., and was admitted to the bar there in 1794, and to the Chester County bar the next year. He remained in the practice of his profession but eighteen months, when he went to reside at the paternal mansion, in order to attend to the management of the Waynesborough estate, which, owing to the long absence of his father in the public service, needed better care than was bestowed by the tenants.

Colonel Wayne was a decided Federalist in politics, and in 1800 and 1801 he was elected a member of the Assembly. In 1806 he was elected a member of the State Senate, and in 1810 was re-elected, but served but one year of that term. In 1814 he was nominated by the Federal party for governor of Pennsylvania, and also as a candidate for Congress, but failed of election to both, although he ran ahead of his ticket. In 1822 he was elected to Congress, but declined re-election in 1824.

He raised a regiment of cavalry in Chester County prior to the War of 1812, of which he was elected colonel, and when that war broke out, he offered his services and those of his regiment to the government. He was ordered to Marcus Hook, and spent the summer of 1814 in Camp Dupont, at which time an attack on Philadelphia was expected.

In 1829 and 1830, he published in "The Casket" a short memoir of his father, in which he studiously presented the most important of the documents relating to his military career.

Colonel Wayne married, 25 August, 1802, Elizabeth Smith, born in 1778.

He was elected, in 1801, a member of the Pennsylvania Assembly, from the County of Philadelphia.* He resided for some years at the corner of Water and Almond Streets, where the buildings of the Franklin Sugar Refinery now stand. From there he removed to what is now No. 628 Spruce Street, where he died. He married, at Boston, Massachusetts, 22 December, 1795, Annah (or Hannah), daughter of Ebenezer Norwood by his wife Abigail Emmes, of that city; born there, 28 November, 1778; died at Philadelphia, 7 July, 1817. The following interesting correspondence relating to their marriage has been preserved:

"Boston, 11th. month, 9th day 1795.

"It is a long time since I intended to write a few lines to my uncle's esteemed friend, Mr. Anthony, to make some interesting enquiries of Mr. Penrose, who has professed a tender affection for my dear niece, Annah Norwood, but was prevented by a severe nervous fever which has just left me, and am getting well fast, for which I am extremely grateful.

"It was a request of my sister, Norwood, by Mr. P.'s desire to ask some information of you through Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith told her he had no doubt of Mr. P. himself, he had behaved like a gentleman at his house, and was generous and manly as it respected Hannah, and that any one who brought letters from you came strongly recommended. We join him there, but after all, the mother as well as the aunt, would be better pleased to have it confirmed by you; for that purpose I am able to write you a few lines.

"The welcome confirmation has come in by letter received by Mr. Smith, entirely to our satisfaction—for which we all join in sincere gratitude to you, my dear sir, for the kind interest you so sincerely take now, and ever have taken, in all that concerns us, ever since I had the pleasure of knowing you; and while I have life I hope to retain the high sense of many obligations to you and your amiable family which I sincerely love; please to offer my affectionate love to them.

"How is my dear Mrs. Pollock? I have been anticipating a visit from her all this summer.

"I have trembled for my sweet girl; my Hannah is, my dear sir, the counterpart of my dear Abby; sweet, gentle, accomodating disposition as ever a child was blessed with. She will be a great acquisition to any family.

"We are very much pleased with the two young men, if either had the preference it was Mr. P., but we did not think at the time that we would please him so well. But how shall I part with her?, Hh. there is the rub. But away with it; many things worse than that may happen to me. If she be happy, I am satisfied.

"My dear Addy has two beautiful children, Samuel and Hannah Smith, we are very happy in her and her children.

"Let me hope for your pardon in keeping you so long, but permit me to wish you every blessing that so good a mind as you possess can enjoy. My most affectionate love attend my dear Mrs. Anthony; I long to see her. With every sentiment of esteem and gratitude,

"I am your sincere friend,

"To Joseph Anthony, Esq."

"Dear Father.

"Yours of the 15th inst. came duly to hand, to which I should have earlier replied had not sundry avocations relative to my peculiar situation prevented me.

"I have now to inform you my dear parents that Tuesday last finished my career of single life, an event very important and which ought to be entered into with prudence and mature deliberation, both which I believe have had every attention from me the matter required; and if a good disposition accompanied with gentle manners and unaffected sincerity are the necessary requisites for the enjoyment of true happiness, I conceive myself to be very fortunate, as my dear partner is possessed of these as well as other agreeable qualities necessary to our mutual happiness. I shall not attempt to prepossess you in favor of a person still unseen, but leave her merits to you, an event we both anticipate the greatest pleasure possible.

"Mr. Smith yesterday received a letter from Mr. Anthony where I observed your anxiety for my return. I hope you will not suppose any time has been unnecessarily spent there, for I do assure you our friends here consider my absence from home and have used every prudent exertion to hasten the time of my departure; but there still remains sundry things to be done before we leave here, and we are doing every thing that lies in our power for that purpose. I can not yet name the time for leaving, but expect it will be in the course of ten or twelve days, of which I shall advise you in due time.

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

"I had once thought of getting a carriage but my friends here fear it would be attended with many inconveniences on the road. They have therefore advised taking the mail stage in the beginning of the week and pursuing the route without stopping until our arrival in New York, which will take from Monday morning 12 o'clock until Saturday following 10 o'clock a. m. a distance of about 240 to 250 miles, which averages about 50 miles a day and which I hope we shall easily accomplish the weather being cool and not so fatiguing as in the summer season. My dear girl desires her sincere love and duty to you both, and all my friends, and wishes to assure you that however affecting and disagreeable the parting with her friends and nearest connections may be, she uses every means in her power to hasten our arrival in Philadelphia, where I have no doubt, (leaving her nearest connections and parents behind) she will find them replaced in the affection of those she may find in my family.

"I have now to request that you make my most sincere acknowledgement to Mr. Anthony for his unbounded friendship and attention to me on this occasion, having experienced through him all possible favors from his worthy friends in this place.

"We both unite our fervent wishes for his and theirs uninterrupted happiness, but language is too weak to express our gratitude to him, and the will must be a substitute for the deed.

"Our mother with uncle and Aunt Smith join us in love to you both and hope to present you with a daughter worthy of your acceptance in every respect, I am, dear father,

"It is with much concern I have observed several post days elapse without receiving any of your esteemed favors, for which I can not account, and as there will be but one mail arrive previous to our departure, I have little expectation of hearing from you until my arrival in New York; a long and very unpleasant silence to me.

"In my last I informed you of my intention of taking the mail stage which I have done, and confirm my expectations of leaving here Monday next (the time mentioned in my last) for New York (where barring accidents) I expect to be in the following Saturday following; and according to previous advice I hope to find Mr. W. 184. CHARLES PENROSE,⁴ son of Thomas Penrose³ by his wife Ann Dowding, was born at Philadelphia, 14 September, 1776; died there, of cholera, 24 June, 1849. In his youth he was instructed in the art of ship-building,—the occupation of his ancestors for several generations,—but in early life he retired from business, being a man of considerable wealth. As early as 1803 he is styled "Gent" in the City Directory. In 1804 he was chosen one of the port wardens of Philadelphia, and in 1812, in response to the wishes of his personal friend, Honorable William Jones, Secretary of the Navy, he accepted the position of Superintendent of the Philadelphia Navy Yard, and in this capacity he supervised the construction of the man-of-war "Franklin," said to have been for many years one of the finest ships in our navy.* In 1813 he was elected one of the com-

* His connection with the navy yard and the building of the "Franklin" is thus mentioned by his granddaughter, Miss Annie Eliza Pennock:

"When appointed Superintendent of the Philadelphia Navy Yard, he found that the Naval Secretary, Honorable William Jones, was quite correct in believing that the yard has been shamefully mismanaged, and the Government plundered in every possible way. His first duty was to dismiss all incompetent and dishonest workmen (the larger part of the employees) and replace them by skillful ship carpenters. He then refused to accept any timber, iron-work, canvas, or cordage, in short everything used in building of a vessel for the navy, contracted for, unless the articles bore the most severe tests as to the quality and quantity. His friend, Mr. Jones told many people, especially President Madison, that the reason he so strongly urged Mr. Penrose to take the position, was because he knew him to be absolutely upright, independent and fearless in the discharge of his duty, also a thoroughly trained and capable shipbuilder, though no longer in the business on his own account, and, most important of all, that no political considerations would influence him in the least in the necessary appointments in the Navy Yard, as had been notoriously the case for several years. The result was the complete reform Mr. Jones hoped for, and the 'Franklin' was long believed to be the best built ship of her class in the United States or any other navies. Some years later, she was sent to the Mediterranean, and while stationed at an Italian port—I think Naples—met many of the finest ships of the English, French, Turkish, Russian, and Swedish navies then visiting that port, and to the great pride and delight of her officers and crew, was pronounced by all competent judges equal in all essentials, if not superior, to the best among the European war-ships. This was of course most gratifying to our Government, and also

He was one of the managers of the Humane Society, and, for thirty-one years, president of the Southern Dispensary. He was elected a director of the Bank of Pennsylvania, in which position he served several years. He was a Whig in politics, and he resided at the southeast corner of Penn and Shippen (now Bainbridge) Streets. He followed his father in attending Friends' Meeting, although, like him, he never became a member of the Society of Friends.

to Mr. Penrose and all others who had striven so hard to make the 'Franklin' what she proved to be, in every sense—'a first rate.' I believe she is still afloat, but razed to two tiers of guns instead of three, and has a steam propellor. I am glad my grandfather did not live to see his good ship spoiled—it was done many years after his death. By a singular coincidence, she was sent to the East commanded by Captain, since Admiral Franklin, and when in Japanese ports, the Japs frequently asked 'if the ship was named after him, or he after the ship.' (From 'Life of Admiral Franklin.') Mr. Penrose did not remain long in the Philadelphia Navy Yard. Though in the prime of life, his health was not good, and he felt it would not always be possible for him to do his duty thoroughly, and he resigned."

† WILLIAM HALL was born in England, and came to America in 1677, and landed at Elsinborough, Salem County, New Jersey, 22d of 12th month, the same year. A few years later he removed to the town of Salem, where he engaged in mercantile pursuits. In 1697 and 1701 he was chosen a member of the assembly of West Jersey; in 1699, and in several subsequent years, he was a justice of the peace and of the Court of Common Pleas for Salem County, and in 1708 he was commissioned a member of the Governor's Council for New Jersey, which office he held until April, 1713. In 1707 he was chosen one of the trustees for the Proprietors of West Jersey. He was himself a large landed proprietor, and was recognized as one of the leading men of the colony. Mr. Hall died circa February, 1713-14. His will was proved 10 February, 1713-14 and dated 10 April, 1713. He married (1), 21 May, 1684, Elizabeth Pyle, who died about 1699; (2) in 1700, Sarah, daughter of William Plumsted, of London, and sister of Honorable Clement Plumsted, who was three times mayor of Philadelphia, and many years a provincial councillor of Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM HALL, son of William Hall by his wife Sarah Plumsted, was born at Salem, 22 October, 1701; died at his seat in Mannington, Salem County, in 1761. He was a large landowner, and in 1755 was commissioned one of the judges of Salem County. He married, 20 November, 1723, Elizabeth Smith, by whom he had, among other children

186. Honorable CLEMENT BIDDLE PENROSE,⁴ only surviving child of James Penrose³ by his wife Sarah Biddle, was born at Philadelphia, 20 February, 1771; and is said to have died, about 1820, at St. Louis, Missouri. He was married at Trinity Church, New York city, by the Reverend Benjamin Moore, 1 August, 1796, to Anne Howard, daughter of Major Charles Bingham* by his wife Anne Howard, daughter of Sheffield Howard. His boyhood was cradled amidst the scenes

* Major Charles Bingham was a kinsman of Charles Bingham, the first Earl of Lucan, and on 25 December, 1776, was commissioned Ensign in the 35th Regiment of Foot, British Army, under Colonel H. Fletcher Campbell. On 21 March, 1782, he was commissioned Captain-Lieutenant and Captain in the 105th Regiment of Foot, under Francis Lord Rawdon, Colonel Commanding, and later became Major. Both of these regiments were in service in America during the Revolution, and shortly after young Bingham arrived in New York with the first regiment above named, he married Anne Howard, daughter of Sheffield Howard, a merchant of that city. Upon the death of Major Bingham, his widow married for second husband, Sir Thomas Hay, which fact is thus recorded in Burke's Peerage: "Sir Thomas Hay, eldest son of Alexander Hay, married, 27 Aug., 1793, Anne, widow of Major of the Revolution, and, in his early childhood, he was selected as one of two youthful standard-bearers to one of the first companies raised in Philadelphia, for that contest, which selection was made to evince that the enthusiasm and fervor of patriotism pervaded the young and the old, and extended to all ranks and conditions. "Driven from Philadelphia when that city fell into the hands of the invading foe, he accompanied his widowed mother and an honored uncle [Colonel Clement Biddle], an officer high in the confidence of the great chief who led our armies to battle, to the Valley Forge; and though but a child, witnessed and shared in the sufferings of that terrible winter—one of the most gloomy periods of the revolution."*

Mr. Penrose enjoyed the advantages of a liberal education, part of which he received in Europe, where he went, in 1788, with his mother, and stepfather, Rudolph Tillier. Returning to Philadelphia, he was commissioned by Governor Mifflin, ensign of a company of light infantry in the seventh battalion of the City and Liberties Militia, a fac-simile of which commission is herewith interleaved. In 1803, he was a candidate for Congress, on the Democratic-Republican ticket, but failed of an election. In 1805, he was commissioned by President Jefferson one of the Land Commissioners of the Louisiana Territory, and removed to St. Louis, then the head-quarters of that government. It is possible that this appointment was secured in part through Gen-

Bingham, and daughter of Sheffield Howard, Esq., of New York, a scion of the noble house of Norfolk, and a loyalist, who lost large possessions during the War for Independence in America."

Sheffield Howard, according to family history, was a younger son of the Duke of Norfolk, and incurred his father's displeasure by marrying his tutor's sister, and came to America to seek his fortune. He settled in New York, about 1741, and engaged in business there as a merchant. He probably died in New Jersey, late in 1788, or early in 1789. Letters of administration on his estate were granted in New Jersey, 21 January, 1789, unto his daughter, Anne Bingham, and in the bond filed, she is called "the wife of Charles Bingham." On 24 November, same year, letters of administration were also granted unto her, in New York, and in the bond filed there, Sheffield Howard is styled "late of the City of New York, gentleman." In a letter of attorney given at New York by Anne Bingham, 20 November, 1792, she is called "the only daughter and heiress of Sheffield Howard." (New York Deeds, cxii, 58.)

He was bred a farmer, and settled on "Springton Farm," on the Brandywine in Chester County. In 1836 and 1837 he was a member of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, and declined a nomination for the State Senate in 1838. In 1840 he was chosen a presidential elector, and voted for Harrison and Tyler, the successful candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency. In 1842 he was elected to the Twenty-eighth Congress from the Seventh District, composed of Chester County, and was re-elected in 1844 and 1846. He was a warm supporter of the protective tariff system, and delivered able speeches in support of his views. He stood among the earliest opponents of the annexation of Texas, and spoke against that measure, 25 January, 1845. He was equally strong in his opposition to appropriations for the prosecution of the war with Mexico. In an able speech, 18 June, 1846, he said: "He washed his hands of this war. It was a war unnecessarily and unjustly forced upon the country by the President, without authority of law, and in violation of the constitution, which gave to Congress alone the power to make war."

Captain McIlvaine is a civil engineer by profession. At twenty-one he was division engineer of the East Brandywine and Waynesburg R. R. In 1861, at the opening of the Civil War, he was appointed by President Lincoln, captain in the 19th Infantry, U. S. A. While waiting an appointment, he became impatient and raised a company of one hundred men, which he attached to the 97th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, then organizing at West Chester, Pennsylvania. For distinguished services, Captain McIlvaine was appointed Chief of Ordnance on the staff of Brigadier-General Alfred H. Terry, and to several other important positions, among them Judge Advocate of the Department of the South. After the close of the war he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Later he became interested in extensive lumber operations, which took him to the mountains of West Virginia. Prior to this he invented the Printer's Copyable Ink, which revolutionized commercial and railroad printing in this country and in Europe. The mountains and mountaineers interested him. He wrote there many humorous sketches and short stories for "The Detroit Free Press," "Puck," "The Continent," "American Magazine," etc.; and began there his study of fungi, which he pursued energetically. This resulted in the publication of his book, "One Thousand American Fungi," the most comprehensive and complete work upon the subject. Captain McIlvaine directed his study in fungi to ascertaining the edible species. Of these, he has by personal experience in eating full meals of them, determined over eight hundred edible species, and is still devoted to this work. He is a contributor to "Century,"

Mr. Hallowell was born at Jenkintown, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, 14 August, 1809, and died at his summer residence, near Media, Pennsylvania, 16 June, 1880. He was educated at Friends' School at Westtown, Chester County. Upon his father's death, he succeeded to the latter's business, that of China and India silk goods importer, and became an eminent merchant. His trade was largely in the South and West, and when the Civil War broke out, the repudiation by the Southern merchants of the debts due his house, then Morris L. Hallowell & Company, forced the firm into liquidation. The business was reorganized under the same firm name, but a few years later Mr. Hallowell retired from the firm, and removed to New York, where he entered into co-partnership with his son, Colonel Norwood P. Hallowell, as a wool commission merchant. He returned to Philadelphia in 1870, and three years later, established the banking house of Morris L. Hallowell & Company, and the following year was elected a member of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange. He continued in the banking business the remainder of his life.

Mr. Hallowell was active in the organization of the Pennsylvania railroad, and was one of its directors. He was also for some years a director of the Bank of North America, and a member of the Union League.

258. Honorable CHARLES BINGHAM PENROSE,⁵ eldest son of Honorable Clement Biddle Penrose⁴ by his wife Anne Howard Bingham, was born at his father's country seat, near Frankford, Philadelphia, 6 October, 1798; died at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, 6 April, 1857. A portion of his boyhood was spent at St. Louis, Missouri, where his father resided for some years after his appointment by President Jefferson as a commissioner of the Louisiana territory. During the War of 1812 the son enlisted in one of the volunteer companies of St. Louis, but the organization was not called into active service. He returned to Philadelphia, and there entered on the study of the law under Samuel Ewing, Esq., and on 9 May, 1821, was admitted to the bar in that city. Shortly afterward he removed to Carlisle, Cumberland County, where he settled in the practice of his profession. "Popular manners, legal erudition, close attention to business, and admirable oratorical powers, soon secured him a large practice," and he rose to a place among the foremost of the eminent jurists of which the bar of Cumberland County was then justly proud.

In early manhood Mr. Penrose became actively identified with political affairs, and took a leading part in many of the public movements of the day. His fame as an orator was such that large demands were made upon him for speeches during political campaigns, and frequently he was for weeks at a time "on the stump" in various parts of the State. In 1833 he was elected a member of the Senate of Pennsylvania, from the district embracing Cumberland and Perry Counties, and was re-elected for a second term of four years in 1837, at which time his district embraced Adams, Franklin, and Cumberland Counties. He remained in the Senate eight years, and was one of the most active and distinguished members of that body, and during that period there were but few who acted a more conspicuous part in the affairs of the Commonwealth than did Senator Penrose. He was for four years Speaker of the Senate, and was serving as such during the noted "Buck-shot War."

The period of his service was one of unparalleled political excitement, and the political controversies of that time were of the most bitter character. In his early career, Mr. Penrose was a Democrat of the Jefferson school. He warmly supported Andrew Jackson for the Presidency, and when first elected to the Senate he was chosen as a Democrat, subsequently, however, identifying himself with the Whig Party, and as a Whig he was overwhelmingly re-elected to the Senate, being voted for not only by the Whigs, but by a large portion of the Democrats of his district. On account of this change in his party alignment, Mr. Penrose was vehemently, viciously, and maliciously assailed by the press of the Democratic Party, as well as by the politicians who remained identified with that organization, and he was charged with treason to the same, to which attacks Mr. Penrose made reply in March, 1839, in one of the most noted speeches ever delivered in the Senate, three days being occupied in its delivery. He claimed that he had not changed his principles; that these were then, as they had always been, those of Mr. Jefferson, but that the Loco Foco Democracy under Jackson had subverted these principles, and that in consequence "the honest portion" of Jackson's followers had deserted his standard. A few extracts from the speech here follow :

"The history of General Jackson will present the most remarkable instance of numerous promises, professions and principles, no doubt at the time honestly made and avowed, but violated and abandoned in succession under the influence of the venal flattery of the designing parasites who surround him,..... No eastern potentate ever had more servile slaves. Instead of independent opinion, party discipline has substituted the will of the leaders of the party, and that will, however contradictory and capricious, must be obeyed..... Such is the discipline of the party; it is black, white, blue, red or green, as the leaders may choose to order, whether the order be true or false..... President Jackson in his inaugural address, declared, as Jefferson had done, that the patronage of the General Government had been brought into conflict with elections, and he promised to restore the Government to the simplicity of the early ages of the Republic. He promised reform of abuses, and he emphatically declared that this reform was inscribed by the people among the first of its duties. But instead of reform, abuses increased—instead of a return to the purity and simplicity of democratic principles, every day produced some new and wider departure from it—instead of restraining the mighty power of the executive arm, it was everywhere felt; and absolute submission claimed to executive will;—instead of forbidding the interference of the officers of the general government with the freedom of elections, it was quietly encouraged and secretly urged, until at last blue-light federalism has come to have so complete an ascendancy that such interference is not only claimed as a right, but enjoined as a duty upon these satraps of power..... The provisions of the constitution were disregarded, and all powers resolved into the will of the executive, fenced in by flatterers, and above all control and beyond all check. Not only did honest federalists leave the party, but the Democrats, however reluctant to sever past political relations, and however they may have lingered and hesitated, left this party by hundreds and thousands..... This, sir, is the history of the latter days of the party, which has driven from its ranks the honest Democrats who were once its bone and sinew, and it has now nothing left of democracy but the much honored, and long abused name."

Among the senators of Pennsylvania at the time Mr. Penrose made the speech referred to, was the late eminent Frederick

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

Fraley, Esq., of Philadelphia. Mr. Fraley addressed the Senate just before Mr. Penrose made his speech, and in the course of his remarks made reference to the attacks upon Mr. Penrose, in the following words:

"Sirs, I leave Charles B. Penrose, who year after year, and session after session, not only defended the principles of the Democratic Party, but the interests of the Commonwealth on this floor, to his own defence. He needs no shield to protect that reputation which he himself is so well able to defend. The services which he has rendered the State are well known, and his memory will be embalmed in the recollection of the people of Pennsylvania when those patriots from the county of Philadelphia, whom the Senator [Brown] has compared to the Hancocks and the Adamses of the Revolution, have rotted down in the niches of infamy, where the virtuous indignation of the people will soon place them; and when the malignant feelings of the partizan shall have given way to the sober reflections of the statesman, the reputation of Charles B. Penrose will stand out in characters of undying brilliancy, not only in the bosom of his own constituents, but in the Commonwealth which has been honored by his birth, and elevated among her confederated sisters by his constant and untiring services."

Mr. Penrose resigned the speakership, 13 March, 1841, on which occasion he delivered an address, which is given in full in the Appendix to this work. Six days later he forwarded his resignation as a member of the Senate. It reads as follows:

"Washington City, March 19th, 1841.

"The Hon. John H. Ewing,

"Speaker of the Senate of Pennsylvania:

"Sir:—Having accepted an office under the Government of the United States, I hereby resign that of Senator in the Senate of Pennsylvania.

"I have the honour to be,

"Very respectfully,

"CHS. B. PENROSE."

Mr. Penrose was a delegate to the Convention which nominated General William Henry Harrison for the Presidency, and during the campaign which followed he was constantly "on the stump," in support of General Harrison's election. So prominent was he in this connection, and so valuable were his services in the work of carrying Pennsylvania for the Whig Party, it was thought by many that Mr. Penrose would be called to a seat in President Harrison's cabinet, but, instead of this, he was appointed Solicitor to the Treasury, and this is the office to which he makes reference in his letter resigning the speakership.

Mr. Penrose retained the solicitorship until the close of President Tyler's administration, and discharged its duties with marked ability and fidelity. After he relinquished the position, he returned to Pennsylvania, and resumed the practice of the law at Lancaster, but removed from that city to Philadelphia in 1847, and there became largely engaged in the pursuits of his profession. In 1849 he was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury by Mr. Meredith, but resigned the same in a short time and returned to Philadelphia.

In 1856 he was elected to the Senate as the candidate of the People's or Republican Party. His family earnestly opposed him re-entering public life, but he accepted the position, and was serving as senator at the time of his decease. His death was caused by pneumonia, brought on by exposure in a railroad accident which happened as he was returning to his post at Harrisburg, after a short visit to his family in Philadelphia.

Mr. Penrose was the projector of the Cumberland Valley Railroad, to promote which he labored zealously for some years, and of which he was at one time the president. The obstacles the enterprise had to contend with were apparently insurmountable, and there were not wanting malicious persons to misconstrue Mr. Penrose's motives in promoting the work of building the road, but he long survived the unjust aspersions made against him, and lived to see his favorite project not only accomplished, but an acknowledged valuable and lucrative public work.

Mr. Penrose was one of the compilers of Penrose & Watt's three volumes of "Reports of Cases in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania" (1831-32), and he was for some years a trustee of Dickinson College, and for four years the secretary of the Board of Trustees. In the biographical sketch of him, printed in

"Men of Mark in Cumberland Valley, Pennsylvania," the author, Reverend Alfred Nevin, LL.D., wrote:

"The character of Mr. Penrose was distinguished by many strong and prominent points. He was emphatically self-reliant, depending on his own resources in the accomplishment of his plans and purposes. The earnestness of his temperament was indicated in everything he undertook. Whatever his hand found to do, he did it with all his might. Such was the enthusiasm of his nature, that it kindled a warm sympathy on all sides in his favor, and greatly aided him in carrying forward his life work. To selfishness he was an entire stranger. . . . Benevolence beamed in his countenance, and often found expression, not in good wishes merely, but in acts of delicate but seasonable kindness. His life was simple and frugal. Everything like ostentation was shunned by him, and he abhorred self-indulgence of all sorts. His generosity was apparent to everybody, amounting almost to a fault. His manner, which was highly cultivated, was gentle, courteous, and genial, offensive to none, attractive to all. Especially was he gracious to his inferiors, careful of their rights, and considerate of their feelings."

He married, 16 March, 1824, Valeria Fullerton, daughter of William McFunn Biddle * by his wife Lydia Spencer, daughter of Reverend Elihu Spencer †; born at Philadelphia, in January, 1799; died there, 15 November, 1881.

* WILLIAM MCFUNN BIDDLE was born McFunn, and added Biddle to his surname by an act of the Legislature, to enable him to inherit an estate from his uncle, Honorable Edward Biddle. He was a son of Captain William McFunn, an officer in the British Navy, by his wife Lydia Biddle, a daughter of William Biddle by his wife Mary, a daughter of Nicholas Scull, the eminent surveyor-general of Pennsylvania. William Biddle was a brother of John Biddle, the grandfather of Honorable Charles Bingham Penrose, of the text.

† Reverend ELIHU SPENCER, born in East Haddam, Connecticut, 12 February, 1721; died in Trenton, New Jersey, 27 December, 1784; was graduated at Yale in 1746, and, with a view to becoming a missionary to the Indians of the Six Nations, studied their dialect and prepared himself for this office under the Reverends John Brainerd and Jonathan Edwards, accompanying the latter to the Indian Conference at Albany in 1748. He was ordained on 14 September, 1748, and, after laboring in western New York, was appointed pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Elizabeth, New Jersey, in 1750, holding this charge until 1756, when he was called to the Presbyterian Church of Jamaica, Long Island. About 1758 he was appointed by Governor James De Lancey chaplain of the New York troops, formed for service in the French war, after which he labored in the contiguous congregations of Shrewsbury, Middletown Point, Shark River, and Amboy, New Jersey. On 29 November, 1775, Congress ordered that two ministers of the gospel be applied to, to go immediately amongst the regulators and highlanders of North Carolina for the purpose of informing them of the nature of the present dispute between Great Britain and the Colonies. Mr. Miller and Reverend Alexander McWhorter were engaged for this purpose. From 1769 until his death he was pastor of the Presbyterian church in Trenton, New Jersey. On 20 October, 1777, Mr. Spencer was elected by Congress, chaplain for the hospitals of the Middle Department of the Continental Army. From 1752 until his death he was a trustee of Princeton became second lieutenant in the 2d Infantry, 1 July, 1828. In 1829 he served in garrison at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri; in 1829-1832, at Sackett's Harbor, New York; in 1832, at Fort Dearborn, Illinois, and in the Black Hawk war against the Sac Indians; in 1833, at Fort Dearborn, and at Fort Brady, Michigan, and from that time until 1836 at Fort Mackinack, Michigan. On 3 July, 1836, he was promoted first lieutenant, and was on duty in Hancock Barracks, Maine, from 1836 until 1838, in which latter year he entered on service in the war in Florida, against the Seminole Indians. From 1842 until 1844 he was on duty at Plattsburg Barracks. On 11 June, 1846, he was promoted captain, and was in service that year at Fort Columbus, New York Harbor. Here it was that second lieutenant (afterward General) William Tecumseh Sherman joined from the Military Academy, and first reported for duty to Captain Penrose.

In the war with Mexico, 1847-48, Captain Penrose was in the field and engaged in the siege of Vera Cruz, 29 March, 1847; battle of Cerro Gordo, 17 April, same year; skirmish of Ocalala, 16 April, same year, on the 20th of which month he was brevetted major for meritorious service in the battle of Cerro Gordo. He afterward participated in the battles of Cheribusco, Molino del Rey, and the capture of the City of Mexico. He was wounded at Cerro Gordo, in consequence of which he was ordered to Plattsburg Barracks, where he died from the effects of the Mexican War.

He married, at Madison Barracks, New York, 30 December, 1827, Mary Ann, daughter of General William Hoffman, of the United States Army; born 20 December, 1812; died 10 November, 1895.

267. CALEB LOWNES ASH,⁵ son of Joseph Ash by his wife Frances Penrose,¹ was born at Philadelphia, 3 August, 1809; died in 1850. He was admitted to the Philadelphia bar, in 1847, and practiced in the law in that city. In 1849, in company with other members of the Philadelphia bar, he started for California, to settle some cases growing out of the development of that new country. On the way one of the party was stricken with yellow fever. Ash was urged to abandon his companion and continue the journey, but his nature rebelled at so doing, and he remained and nursed his companion to health, but contracted the disease himself, from which he died. He married, 25 May, 1836, Bella Maria, daughter of John Ashmead by his wife Anna Lehman; born in August, 1811; died 27 January, 1895.

When seventeen years of age he became a member of the First Troop, Philadelphia City Cavalry, and when the news came that Fort Sumter had been fired on, he hastened to Washington, and, 18 April, 1861, was made first lieutenant in the battalion raised by Cassius M. Clay to defend the capital city. For a reconnoissance he made across the Potomac into the enemy's lines at great personal peril, President Lincoln appointed him second lieutenant in the regular army, 30 April, 1861, and he was attached to the Fifth Cavalry. Through deeds of conspicuous daring he was promoted first lieutenant and captain, and was brevetted major for gallantry in battle at Warrenton, Virginia, 8 November, 1862, where he received three sabre-cuts and one bullet. He was brevetted lieutenant-colonel for gallantry at the battle of Spottsylvania on 8 May, 1864, where he was killed at the head of his troop. The heroic deed that makes his name historic occurred in February, 1864, when Ash rode toward the enemy's lines on the Rapidan in full view of the enemy to discover their strength. The whole army fired at him, but he was unharmed. Then the rebels stopped shooting and cheered him for his bravery. Not to be outdone, Ash raised his hat and rode toward the Federal Army again. General Wesley Merritt thus spoke of this event: "I thought then, and still think, that it was the bravest deed on the part of an individual I ever witnessed."

310. Major WILLIAM WAYNE,⁶ son of Isacher Evans by his wife Mary Wayne Atlee,⁵ and great-grandson of Major-General Anthony Wayne, was born in Willistown Township, Chester County, Pennsylvania, 6 December, 1828; died at his ancestral home "Waynesborough," near Paoli, 20 November, 1901. His name was changed by Act of Assembly to William Wayne. He was educated at the University of Pennsylvania, taking a course in arts and a partial course in medicine, and was graduated in 1846. He at once took charge of the family estate and gave this business his undivided attention until President Lincoln, in 1861, issued his first call for three years' troops, whereupon Major Wayne relinquished his business, raised a company which became Company "K" (Wayne Guards), 97th Regiment, Pennsylvania Infantry, with which he served through the operations of 1862, the expedition to Warsaw Sound, Ga.; Fort Clinch, Fernandina and Jacksonville, Florida; Edisto, John and James Islands, South Carolina, and during part of the October campaign of that year, at Hilton Head, South Carolina. In September, 1862, he was detailed on recruiting service, and returned to Pennsylvania. His health having suffered from exposure and climatic influences, and being unable to return to duty, he tendered his resignation and received an honorable discharge from the service by order of the Secretary of War, Special Order No. 24, January 19, 1863. After the war he was appointed to the Staff of General Dobson of the National Guards of Pennsylvania, with the rank of major. Major Wayne served as a representative from Chester County in the lower house of the Legislature from 1881 to 1886, and was a member of various important committees. With the exception of his military and political service, Major Wayne passed his life quietly as a country gentleman on the great estate that has been in the possession of the Wayne family for nearly two hundred years.

Upon the death of Major Wayne's grandfather, Colonel Isaac Wayne, he, in 1855, was admitted to membership in the State Society of the Cincinnati of Pennsylvania, as the legal representative of General Wayne. In 1887 he was elected the President of that society, and in 1896 the President-General of the Society of Cincinnati. He was one of the organizers and charter members of the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, and became its first president, which position he held until within a few months of his death, when, on account of failing health, he declined re-election. Besides his membership in these societies, he was a member and sometime President of the Society of Colonial Wars in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and a member of the Society of the War of 1812, the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, the United Service Club, the Hibernian Society, and of the Masonic fraternity. He also served for a time upon the Valley Forge Park Commission by appointment of the Governor of the Commonwealth. He was also a communicant of St. David's at Radnor, in whose ancient burial-ground his remains were laid to rest with those of his ancestors.

the "Harriet Lane," were either killed or wounded, and all others were taken prisoners, Surgeon Penrose among the number. He was compelled to walk from Galveston to Alexander, Louisiana, and was there placed on a prison ship. After his release he was ordered to the "Massachusetts," to convey the wounded from the fleet off Charleston, South Carolina, to northern hospitals. He was later engaged in cruising off the West Indies, South America, Europe, Japan, China, East Indies, Java, Africa, and other places in various ships, and in the "Levant" he visited Constantinople, Smyrna, and along the coast of Syria.

Surgeon Penrose was on duty at the Naval Hospital in Philadelphia from 1872 until 1874; served as a member of the Navy Medical Examining Board from 1880 until 1882, and from 1893 until 1894 was in command of the Naval Hospital at Norfolk, Virginia. He was retired from the Navy in 1895, on account of limitation of age, at which time he was on duty superintending the construction of the Naval Hospital at New York.

375. Colonel WILLIAM MCFUNN PENROSE,⁶ eldest son of Honorable Charles Bingham Penrose⁵ by his wife Valeria Fullerton Biddle, was born in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, 29 March, 1825; died 2 September, 1872. He graduated at Dickinson College in July, 1844, and at once devoted himself to the study of law, and two years after he had received his degree of A.B., entered upon his chosen profession in his native place. He rapidly secured reputation and practice, and soon became a leader at a Bar celebrated for its learning and ability.

At the breaking out of the Rebellion, Mr. Penrose joined the Pennsylvania Reserves, and was elected Colonel of the Sixth Regiment. His constitution, however, was entirely unfitted for the exposure of the camp, and he laid there the foundation of the indisposition which eventually cut short his life at an early age. After participating in the active campaign, and distinguishing himself at the battle of Drainsville, one of the first successes on our side of the war, he was obliged to resign on account of severe ill health, from which he never entirely recovered.

In the community in which he lived, Colonel Penrose was universally beloved for his many noble qualities. Generous to a fault, and with a heart full of sympathy for the weaknesses and suffering of others, his aid and counsel were sought by great numbers of people totally unable ever to remunerate him for his professional services. As a lawyer he was learned, quick in his perceptions, cogent in argument, highly gifted as a speaker, and very successful.

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

His demise was greatly deplored. The entire bar assembled in the court-room to pay a tribute to his memory. The Honorable James H. Graham, Judge Junkin, A. B. Sharpe, Esq., R. M. Henderson, H. C. Herman, Lemuel Todd, W. H. Miller, and C. E. Maglaughlin, Esq., eulogized in strongest terms the personal qualities, social virtues, and professional ability of the lamented dead. Judge Graham referred to the deceased as "the kind and amiable Penrose, removed in the prime of his life, in the midst of his usefulness, and in the enjoyment of a large and lucrative practice, well merited by a life of untiring labor and research in acquiring a knowledge of legal science surpassed by few of his age." And Judge Junkin said, "his astuteness, vigor of thought, and keenness of perception in grasping the result of a principle, and then wielding it with a steady hand, I have never seen surpassed." *

The meeting which subsequently, as a body, attended the funeral of their brother, unanimously expressed their opinion and feeling of his character and worth as follows:

"Resolved, That by indefatigable industry, unremitting devotion to the study of the law, united with a calm temper, and uniform courtesy of manner, this able lawyer has left behind him a reputation which will long live in the recollections of the Bar and the community."

"Resolved, That we feel with deep sensibility the loss we have sustained by the death of Mr. Penrose, who has for a quarter of a century been actively engaged in his profession in our midst, for whose professional attainments we entertain the highest respect, and for whose estimable qualities we have the most profound regard."

He married, July, 1858, Valeria, daughter of General Charles Merchant, U. S. A.

SIXTH GENERATION.

376. RICHARD ALEXANDER FULLERTON PENROSE,⁶ M.D., LL.D., son of Honorable Charles Bingham Penrose⁵ by his wife Valeria Fullerton Biddle, was born at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, 24 March, 1827. He was graduated at Dickinson College in 1846, from which institution he received the degree of Doctor of Laws in 1872. After completing his college course, he entered upon the study of medicine at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and was graduated at the same in 1849. From 1851 until 1853 he was resident physician at the Pennsylvania Hospital; in 1853 he became physician to the Southern Home for Children, and in 1854 consulting physician at the Philadelphia Hospital, where he delivered clinical lectures on diseases of women and children. Here it was that Dr. Penrose first distinguished himself as a medical teacher. In 1856 he was one of the founders of the Children's Hospital, and contributed to its success much of his time, energy, and pecuniary resources. He was for a number of years a successful private teacher of medicine, and his private course of lectures was largely attended.

In 1863 the trustees of the University of Pennsylvania elected him to the professorship of Obstetrics and Diseases of Women and Children, made vacant by the resignation of the illustrious Dr. Hugh L. Hodge, which chair he filled with great distinction until 1889, when he voluntarily retired from the position, and at the same time gave up active practice in medicine. Dr. Penrose always attracted very large classes of students, who listened to his lectures with the closest and most absorbed attention, and his bearing toward them was always dignified, graceful, and affectionate. On 6 October, 1873, he delivered a discourse commemorative of the life of Dr. Hugh L. Hodge, his predecessor, before the trustees, professors, and students of the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, which discourse was published in pamphlet form.

Dr. Penrose had a large private practice. During the Civil War he served as Surgeon at the Satterlee Hospital, this being one of the largest and most important of the army hospitals in Philadelphia. He has been a member of the College of Physicians since 1854; was one of the founders of the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania, as well as of the Gynæcean Hospital of Philadelphia, and is a member of the American Philosophical Society, and the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences.

He married, 28 September, 1858, Sarah Hannah, daughter of Jeremiah Smith Hubbard Boies, by his wife Mary Frances Caroline Thomas; born at "Rockland," Cecil County, Maryland, 31 March, 1834; died of pneumonia at Philadelphia, 30 March, 1881. Mrs. Penrose was a woman of rare culture and refinement, of unusual intelligence and phenomenal and magnificent beauty. She became the mother of seven sons. At a very early period of her married life she abandoned entirely society and devoted herself exclusively to the education of her children, and this she kept up until her death in 1881—a few months before her two eldest sons graduated from Harvard University with highest honors, honors due, in a great measure, to their mother's untiring devotion to them. She came of the best blood of Maryland and Massachusetts. Her father was a son of Judge William Hubbard,* and added Boies to his name after he was adopted by an uncle, Jeremiah Smith Boies, a prominent and wealthy merchant of Boston. Judge Hubbard was a descendant of William Hubbard, who was one of the first graduating class at Harvard College in 1642. Mrs. Penrose's mother was born at Rockland, Maryland, and was a daughter of Philip Thomas, Jr., by his wife Sarah Margaret Weems, and the great-great-great-granddaughter of Honorable Philip Thomas, who died in Maryland, in 1675, and was a member of the ^bGOVERNOR DUDLEY was eminent among the early Massachusetts colonists. He was a son of Captain Roger Dudley, of the English Army, and descended from the Barons of Dudley. He was born in Northampton, England, in 1576; at twenty, was commissioned captain by Queen Elizabeth, and led his company "of the Northampton gallants over to the siege of Amiens, in Picardy." He became a zealous Puritan, and was for many years the steward of the fourth Earl of Lincoln. In 1630 he was chosen deputy-governor of Massachusetts, and came with Governor Winthrop to that colony in the same year. In 1634, and again in 1640, 1645, and 1650, he was elected governor, and in 1644 was chosen commander-in-chief of the military forces of the colony, with the title of major-general. From the time of his arrival in Massachusetts, until his death, 31 December, 1653, when not governor, he served either as deputy-governor, or as a member of the Governor's Council of Assistants.

382. Captain JOSEPH BIDDLE WILKINSON PENROSE,⁶ son of Clement Biddle Penrose⁵ by his wife Ann Wilkinson, was born at Velasco, Plaquemines Parish, Louisiana, 7 March, 1835. He served four years in the Confederate service during the Civil War, and at the time of his death, commanded a company in a Louisiana regiment, of which his maternal uncle, Robert Wilkinson, was colonel. He participated in the principal battles in Virginia and Maryland, and was mortally wounded in a skirmish at High Bridge, Appomattox County, Virginia, 6 April, 1865, three days prior to General Lee's surrender, and probably died the same day. He fell during a charge, which he, as senior officer, was leading, and as he fell, he called to his men to "go on." This was the last known of him. His son was born eight months after his death, and died about at five months old. His girl wife refused for many months to believe that he was really dead. Her anxiety and suspense, with her grief at the death of her babe, undermined her health, and she died a childless widow at twenty-three years of age, and was buried at Charlottesville, Virginia.

Captain Penrose married at Norfolk, Virginia, February, 1862, Jane Vaughan, daughter of John Henry Butler by his wife Rebecca Frances Camp; born at Norfolk, Virginia, December, 1846; died at Charlottesville, Virginia, May, 1867.

385. General WILLIAM HENRY PENROSE,⁶ son of Major James Wilkinson Penrose⁵ by his wife Mary Ann Hoffman, was born at Madison Barracks, Sackett's Harbor, New York, 10 March, 1832. Inheriting military blood from both his father and mother, and born under the shadow of the flag in the garrison at Madison Barracks, he imbibed the military spirit in his childhood, but his father prepared him for service in the civil walks of life. He was educated at Dickinson College as a civil and mechanical engineer, and upon leaving college he joined the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, as a surveyor on the Burlington division, and he was still engaged in civil engineering at the outbreak of the Civil War. This brought him the opportunity he had long coveted,—engaging in the military service,—and on 13 April, 1861, he received a commission as second lieutenant, Third U. S. Infantry, but was assigned to duty in the Third Artillery, then stationed at Fort Randall, Dakota Territory. Here he remained among the Sioux Indians, until ordered to join his regiment, then in the field in Virginia.

After the battle of Ball's Bluff he was offered the colonelcy of the First California, three-battalion regiment, afterward the Ninety-first Pennsylvania. This important command was offered by total strangers to him. He accepted, and was ordered to take command, but his immediate commander, General Sykes, intercepted the order relieving him from his place in the Regulars, and he never received it.

During the Pennsylvania campaign, he was offered the command of two other regiments, but, owing to General Sykes' aversion to parting with any of the regular army officers, he failed to receive the appointment to either command. He participated in the Pennsylvania campaign, and was recommended for three brevets for conspicuous gallantry.

After the second Bull Run battle he was stricken with swamp fever, and upon recovery was ordered to duty as instructor of new regiments, at which time regiments were coming in under the call of the President. He had special charge of one brigade of the Provisional Division, holding part of the defences of Washington, also doing secret service duty in that city. On being relieved from duty there in November, 1862, a petition was signed by every officer in the five regiments of the brigade requesting the Secretary of War to appoint Lieutenant Penrose to command the brigade, with the rank of brigadier-general, but this effort failed, as at that time no vacancies existed in that grade.

He rejoined his regiment in December, and commanded a company in the first Fredericksburg fight, and on the withdrawal of his division he was detailed to command the companies covering the movement and taking up the pontoon bridges. Immediately afterward he was made adjutant, quartermaster, and commissary of his regiment.

In January, 1863, General Torbert, commanding the First New Jersey Brigade, requested Lieutenant Penrose to call upon him. He did so, finding the latter ill. General Torbert informed Penrose that he would be obliged to take sick leave, and that, before going home, he desired to see the Fifteenth New Jersey, a new regiment, with a competent man at its head, and asked Penrose to accept the position, which he did, and, on 18 April, 1863, assumed command of the regiment, afterward so well known as the Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers.

On 27 April was inaugurated the battle of Chancellorsville. The Sixth Corps, of which the Fifteenth New Jersey was a part, was ordered to cross the river below Fredericksburg. The regiment designated to cross in the pontoon boats not being ready, and an aid finding Colonel Penrose and his regiment standing at arms, directed him to move forward, and hence this regiment was the first to cross, which was gallantly done in the face of a heavy fire, and the way cleared for laying the pontoon bridges for the rest of the command. Colonel Penrose, in his official report of this movement, and of the events of the next few days, wrote:

"My command broke camp at White Oak Church, Virginia, the afternoon of Tuesday, April 28th, and marched to the bank of the Rappahanock, near Franklin's Crossing, where it bivouacked until near morning, when it was moved to the river and crossed in boats, just before daylight in the morning of the 29th, taking up a position on the left bank. Remained there until the morning of the 3d of May, a portion of which time was employed in doing outpost duty immediately in the face of the enemy; remaining upon this duty, taking up various positions, and part of the time exposed to severe scattering flank fire from the enemy's lines of skirmishers, until the enemy was driven from his position on the heights above Fredericksburg, and the line of battle was ordered to retire from that place, when I was left in the rear as a support to our retiring skirmishers, by order of the General commanding the Division. Everything was brought from the field without difficulty. After procuring ambulances, to get which I had to send to the city of Fredericksburg, and moving the wounded left on the battle-field during the rapid movements, I proceeded upon the line of march of the corps. Arriving some distance out of the city on the plank road, I learned that the enemy was making stout resistance in front, and that the First Brigade (N. J.) was about to engage him. Marching as rapidly as possible, I arrived at the front at about 5 o'clock P. M., and without halting, was immediately ordered by General commanding the Corps to engage the enemy on the right of the road, in which the enemy had taken a position and effectively resisted every attempt to dislodge him. My command advanced about a quarter of a mile through a dense woods and in places of almost impassable undergrowth, to about thirty yards of the enemy's position, where I engaged at least four of his regiments, with, I am convinced, terrible effect, but without driving him from his well-chosen position. Just after dark, my command being entirely exhausted, and the enemy's fire destructive, after having another regiment sent to relieve me, I retired in good order, the enemy showing no disposition to follow. . . . Sunday night my command bivouacked upon the battle-field. During the engagement on Monday was assigned to various positions, part of which was supporting batteries. When at night the artillery was ordered toward the river, I was ordered to follow it. Recrossed the river just before daylight, and went into camp on the right bank."

SIXTH GENERATION.

Twice during the movement thus mentioned, Colonel Penrose was in command of his brigade, and after the river was recrossed he again fell in command, which he retained until a few days before the battle of Gettysburg, when General Torbert rejoined the army in the field.

During the battle at Spottsylvania, May 8th, just after General Sedgwick had been killed, an order was received from General Grant for Colonel Penrose to assume command of the brigade, without regard to rank, thus placing him over all of his seniors. But one other instance of such high honor was conferred during the war. After participating in the bloody fights about this point, he again was assigned the honor of covering the withdrawal of the army, and again so assigned, at Cold Harbor.

While in front of Petersburg his Corps was ordered to Washington, to meet Early's move against that city, and from there into the Shenandoah Valley, under General Sheridan, where Colonel Penrose participated in every battle save one. At Cedar Creek he was severely wounded, necessitating the removal of several inches of the bones of his right arm, but in spite of this serious injury he was absent from his command but three months, and returned to participate in the engagements about Petersburg, where he was again wounded but did not leave the field, and was in the subsequent battles up to the date of Lee's surrender.

After the close of the war he was made judge advocate-general on the staff of Major General Hancock, and stationed at Fort Leavenworth. In the early Spring of 1867 he was ordered to cross the plains into Colorado, and there establish a military post at Fort Lyon, which he did, taking his family with him, although the journey was through hostile Indian country. From this time to the date of his retirement he constantly served with the colors, and almost continually on frontier duty, being engaged in many Indian expeditions. While in command at Fort Lyon the venerable Kit Carson, of Western fame, came to his house and died there, and during his campaign in the winter of 1867-68, against the Southern Indians, W. F. Cody (Buffalo Bill) served as his chief of scouts.

The following is Colonel Penrose's record as given in the Army Register:

"ACCOUNT OF SERVICE.

* HARRIET ELIZABETH BROWN was born at Brownsville, New York, 30 September, 1803, and died at Fort Niagara, New York, 6 September, 1884. She was a daughter of Major Samuel Brown by his wife Nancy Skinner. Major Brown was born at Fallsington, Bucks County, Pennsylvania, 3 November, 1782, and died at Saratoga Springs, New York, 24 June, 1842. He entered the U. S. Army as major and paymaster, in March, 1813, which position he resigned 18 June, 1816. His wife Nancy Skinner was born at Williamstown, Massachusetts, 5 February, 1784; died 18 October, 1814. Major Brown was a son of Samuel Brown, who was born in Bucks County, 1 November, 1751, and removed in later years to a point on the Black River, New York, where he had purchased land of Rudolph Tillier, the agent of a large land company on the St. Lawrence River. Here he built his home, and gave the name to the town of Brownsville. He married, 10 March, 1773, Abi White, by whom he had twelve children, Major Samuel Brown being one, and the eminent Major-General Jacob Brown, who distinguished himself in the War of 1812, and rose to the command of the army of the U. S., was another. The father of the elder Samuel Brown was John Brown, of Bucks County, Pennsylvania, where he was born 29 August, 1725; died 18 January, 1802; married, Ann Field, and was a son of Samuel Brown, born in Bucks County, 6 November, 1694; died 3 October, 1769; married, 6 September, 1717, Ann Clark, and was a son of George Brown, born in Leicestershire, England, in 1643; died in Buck County, Pennsylvania, in 1726, having emigrated to that province among the first colonists.

485. HONORABLE BOIES PENROSE,⁷ son of Dr. Richard Alexander Fullerton Penrose⁶ by his wife Sarah Hannah Boies, was born at Philadelphia, 1 November, 1860. He received his early education at the Episcopal Academy and under private tutors.

He graduated from Harvard University with honors in 1881, being one of the five out of a class of nearly two hundred and fifty, selected by competitive examination to deliver an oration at commencement. The subject of his paper was: "Martin Van Buren as a Politician."

Upon leaving college he engaged in the study of the law, with Honorable Wayne McVeagh and George Tucker Bispham, Esq.; was admitted to the Philadelphia bar in 1883, and immediately entered on the practice of his profession, associating himself with S. Davis Page and Edward P. Allinson, Esqrs., under the firm name of Page, Allinson & Penrose. In 1884 he was elected to the legislature of Pennsylvania, as the representative from the Eighth Philadelphia District, and in November, 1886, he was elected to the State Senate for a term of four years, from the Sixth Senatorial District, composed of the Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Wards. In May, 1889, he was chosen president pro tempore of that body, and in November, 1890, he was re-elected to the Senate, and when it assembled in January, 1891, he was re-elected President pro tempore. In 1894 he was again re-elected to the Senate, and in January, 1897, was elected United States Senator for the term of six years, and in January, 1903, was re-elected for the term expiring in March, 1909.

486. CHARLES BINGHAM PENROSE,⁷ M.D., Ph.D., son of Dr. Richard Alexander Fullerton Penrose⁶ by his wife Sarah Hannah Boies, was born at Philadelphia, 1 February, 1862. He was prepared for college at the Episcopal Academy and by private tutors, and entered Harvard University when in his sixteenth year. He was graduated in 1881, receiving the degree of A.B., with highest honors in physics.

On leaving college, he entered upon the study of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, and at the same time continued his studies in mathematics and physics at Harvard, where, by special permission of the University Council, he was allowed to try for the degree of Ph.D., on condition that he should spend two months of each yearly term at Harvard. He received the degree of M.D. from the University of Pennsylvania, and the degree of Ph.D. in physics from Harvard, both in the spring of 1884.

In 1885 and 1886 he was resident physician at the Pennsylvania Hospital, and in 1887 was appointed out-patient surgeon to the same. In 1888 he became one of the founders and surgeons of Gynæcean Hospital. In 1890 he was appointed surgeon to the German Hospital, and in 1893 was chosen professor of Gynecology in the University of Pennsylvania—succeeding Professor William Goodell. In 1899 he voluntarily resigned his professorship, and at the same time retired from the active practice of medicine. He is the author of a "Text-Book on Diseases of Women," now in its fifth edition, and of many contributions to medical journals. From 1878 until 1884 he published a number of articles on mathematical and physical subjects. He is a member of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, the American Gynecological Society, the Academy of Natural Sciences, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the National Geographic Society, etc., a director of the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, and was Honorary Chairman of the Section on Obstetrics, Gynecology and Abdominal Surgery of the Second Pan-American Medical Congress, held in the City of Mexico, November, 1896.

Dr. Penrose married at New York, 17 November, 1892, Katharine Drexel, daughter of the late eminent banker, Joseph W. Drexel, Esq., by his wife Lucy, daughter of Thomas Lloyd

487. RICHARD ALEXANDER FULLERTON PENROSE,⁷ JR., fourth son of Dr. Richard Alexander Fullerton Penrose by his wife Sarah Hannah Boies, was born at 1331 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, 17 December, 1863, entered Harvard University in 1880, at the age of seventeen years, and graduated with the highest honors in 1884. He remained for post-graduate studies two years longer, and, in 1886, received the degrees of A.M. and Ph.D. His thesis for the degree of Ph.D. was entitled "The Nature and Origin of Deposits of Phosphate of Lime," and this thesis was promptly published by the United States Geological Survey.

In 1888 he was appointed Geologist in charge of the Survey of Eastern Texas, on the Geological Survey of that State. In 1889 he was appointed by the Geological Survey of Arkansas to make detailed reports on the manganese and iron ore regions of that State. In 1892 he was elected Professor of Economic Geology at the University of Chicago, and, in 1893, gave a course of lectures on Economic Geology at the Stanford University of California. In 1894, while still holding these professorships, he was appointed by the United States Geological Survey, Special Geologist to examine and report on the gold district of Cripple Creek, Colorado.

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

The literary work of Mr. Penrose has been varied and extensive, and up until now, strictly scientific and professional. The following are his principal works:

"The Nature and Origin of Deposits of Phosphate of Lime," Bulletin United States Geological Survey, No. 46, 1888, 143 pages.

"Geology of the Gulf Tertiary of Texas, from the Red River to the Rio Grande," Geological Survey of Texas, First Annual Report, 1889, 101 pages.

"Manganese, its Uses, Ores, Deposits," Geological Survey of Arkansas, 1890, Vol. 1, 642 pages.

"The Iron Deposits of Arkansas," Geological Survey of Arkansas, 1892, Vol. 1, 153 pages.

"The Mining Geology of the Cripple Creek District, Colorado," 1895, 98 pages, being Part II of "The Geology and Mining Industries of the Cripple Creek District, Colorado," by Whitmore Cross and R. A. F. Penrose, Jr., United States Geological Survey, Sixteenth Annual Report, 1894-95.

In addition to the above works, Mr. Penrose has furnished shorter articles in the "American Journal of Science"; "Bulletin of the Geological Society of America"; "Journal of Geology"; "Proceedings of the American Association for the Advancement of Science"; "Geological Survey of Texas Reports"; "Mining and Engineering Journal"; "The Mineral Industry"; "Geological and Scientific Magazine," etc.

SEVENTH GENERATION.

At the present date (1903) Mr. Penrose is engaged in many and varied enterprises. He is President of the Commonwealth Mining and Milling Company; one of the Executive Committee of the Hanover Bessemer Iron Ore Association; a director of the Colorado-Philadelphia Reduction Company at Colorado City, Colorado; a member of the Board of Managers of the Philadelphia, Germantown and Norristown Railroad Company; a director of the Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railway in Arizona. He is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; a member of the Geological Society of America; a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers; a member of the National Geographic Society, Colorado Scientific Society, Geological Society of Washington, and the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia.

488. SPENCER PENROSE,⁷ fifth son of Dr. Richard Alexander Fullerton Penrose⁶ by his wife Sarah Hannah Boies, was born at 1331 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, 2 November, 1865. Entered Harvard University in 1882, at the age of seventeen, graduating with credit in 1886. He entered at once into the active and earnest work of the Western States and Territories and, finally, became interested, in the beginning of their development, in the mines of Cripple Creek, Colorado. At the present (1903) he is engaged in a great variety of business enterprises—real estate, railroad, gold, copper and other mines, reduction of ores, etc.

498. STEPHEN BEASLEY LINNARD PENROSE,⁷ son of the Honorable Clement Biddle Penrose⁶ by his wife Mary Beasley Linnard, was born at Philadelphia, 20 December, 1864. He was graduated at Williams College in 1885; was an instructor there in 1886-87, and in 1890, went to Dayton, Washington, as a Home Missionary, becoming pastor of the Congregational Church there, and an incorporator of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and is now the president of Whitman College, at Walla Walla, Washington, and filling

512. GEORGE BRIGHT PENROSE,⁷ son of Clement Biddle Penrose⁶ by his wife Camille Adele Marie Bright, was born at New Orleans, Louisiana, 10 October, 1857; died there, 6 June, 1903. He was educated in the public schools of New Orleans and at Bellville College, Virginia, completing his education at Soule's College in New Orleans. He commenced his business life with the cotton firm of Anderson & Simpson; was later superintendent of the money order department of the New Orleans post office, and was afterwards with the United States Light House Board. Later, he and his brother, Clement Biddle Penrose, went into the cotton press business, under the firm name of Penrose Brothers. On 4 November, 1896, he was elected by the City Council as Treasurer of New Orleans, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of General Euclid Boylan. In 1899, he was nominated City Treasurer by the Regular Democratic Party, and was elected at the ensuing election, and was serving in such capacity at his death.

Mr. Penrose was an enthusiastic national guardsman, and was a commissioned officer of the Crescent Rifles, and was with that command during all the competitive drills which made the company famous. He was a partner in the cotton brokerage firm of Smith & Penrose, a member of the New York and New Orleans cotton exchanges, and a director of the Louisiana

National Bank, the Inter-State Trust and Banking Company, the United States Deposit and Savings Bank, and other important business corporations. He was a member of the Boston Pickwick and Choctaw clubs, and captain of the Mistie Krewe of Comus, the leading carnival organization of New Orleans, besides a valued member of other carnival organizations. The New Orleans "Times-Democrat," of 7 June, in its article on the death of Mr. Penrose, said:

"It will seem impossible to believe to thousands of persons in New Orleans this morning that the genial, whole-souled, popular gentleman, a man among men, George B. Penrose, is no more. He was a part of the city. Almost everybody knew and loved him. Whoever came in contact with him felt the influence of his kindliness and his engaging manners, born of an innate consideration for the feelings of others. His greeting, even of a comparative stranger, had the effect of making a fast friend. He was so well known and liked by persons in all sorts and conditions of life that he justly came to have the reputation of being the most popular man in New Orleans. . . . In fact, the active and charming personal life of Mr. Penrose, pervaded the business and social life of New Orleans. His vigorous influence was felt in all circles."

"The Daily Picayune," of New Orleans, in its edition of 7 June, 1903, thus mentions Mr. Penrose's death:

"The community will learn with keen regret of the death last evening of Hon. George B. Penrose, for the past seven years City Treasurer of New Orleans. Of the many prominent men who have held public office in recent years, none have been more generally liked than Mr. Penrose. He played a less conspicuous rôle in local politics probably than many others, but as a public official, in a position of the very first importance, he won general confidence and regard, and his death will be genuinely regretted by all classes in the community.

"Mr. Penrose was chosen City Treasurer on the death of General Euclid Boylan early in the Flower Administration. So well did he administer the affairs of the Treasurer's office during the three years he served under Mayor Flower that he was nominated to succeed himself on the regular Democratic ticket and was triumphantly elected. His management of the office during the present administration has been marked by the same conspicuous ability and success which characterized his first years in office in Mayor Flower's time.

"Mr. Penrose was probably even better known socially and in business circles than as a public official. He has always taken a prominent part in the city's social life, was connected with the most important clubs and played a leading rôle in the management of some of the most conspicuous features of the Carnival.

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

"At the time of his death, Mr. Penrose was a comparatively young man, which makes his untimely demise all the greater shock to all who knew him. He has lived in this city all his life, and was thoroughly identified with the aims and ambitions of the community. Whether in private business life or in public office, his career has been equally honorable. With him public office was a public trust, and for this reason his death is a public misfortune."

Mr. Penrose married, 10 November, 1887, Mary Laura Elizabeth, daughter of the late Arthur Ambrose Maginnis by his wife Elizabeth Jane Armstrong; born 17 July, 1861.

544. GEORGE BRIGHT PENROSE,⁸ born 3 July, 1892.

523. Captain CHARLES WILKINSON PENROSE,⁷ son of General William Henry Penrose⁶ by his wife Harriet Elizabeth Adams, was born at Niles, Michigan, 10 March, 1858, and was educated at Hellmoth College, London, Canada. On 30 October, 1884, he was appointed second lieutenant in the Eleventh United States Infantry, and was promoted first lieutenant, 13 April, 1889. In 1891 he graduated at the War College, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, in which he was an instructor in Military and Civil Law, in 1892-3, and from 1894 until 1896, the secretary of the college. In 1891 he commanded the Apache Indian Company of his regiment, and he served with his command at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, commanding the advance guard at the taking of Porto Rico. He was promoted captain, 26 April, 1898. He married, 19 January, 1886, Mary M., daughter of John D. Minor, of Cincinnati, Ohio. She died at Buford, Dakota Territory, 10 April, 1887, and he married (2), at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, 1 November, 1894, Lucy Wadham, daughter of Colonel Edwin F. Townsend, U. S. Army. No issue.

524. Captain GEORGE HOFFMAN PENROSE,⁷ son of General William H. Penrose⁶ by his wife Harriet Elizabeth Brown, was born at Whitehall, New York, 4 June, 1861. He was educated at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and received the degree of M.D. from the University of Buffalo, New York, in 1885. After spending two years as hospital intern, he was appointed acting assistant-surgeon in the U. S. Army, and served at Fort Totten, Dakota Territory, and Madison Barracks, New York, and was later appointed assistant-surgeon, and served at the Soldiers' Home, Washington, D. C. In 1894 he resigned from the army, to enter private practice at Salt Lake City, Utah, and in 1896 was appointed Surgeon-General of the State. At the outbreak of the war with Spain he was commissioned major and brigade surgeon, United States Volunteers, and accompanied the first expedition from San Francisco to Manila; was engaged in the battle culminating in the capture of Manila, 13 August, 1898, and was recommended for brevet lieutenant-colonel for conspicuous gallantry on the battle-field. He was in charge there of captured Spanish medical property; served as inspector of military prisoners, and established and commanded the first reserve hospital in Manila. At the breaking out of the Philippine Insurrection he took the field as chief surgeon of the First Brigade, First Division, Eighth Army Corps, and participated in all the battles, engagements, and skirmishes of his command. He was chief surgeon of the First Division, under Major-General Henry Ware Lawton, and was with him throughout the several campaigns which he conducted. For his services at the battle of San Isidro, 17 May, 1899, General Lawton recommended him for brevet lieutenant-colonel, and for his services at the Dessert fight, 10 June, 1899, he was recommended for Colonel, as will be seen from the following letters :

I., April, 22d to May 30th (San Isidro or Northern Expedition) recommended you for Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers, under section 1209 R. S.

"The following is an extract from the General's report of that expedition:

"In the afternoon of the 17th after the battle of San Isidro, several insurgent wounded were reported on the field of the morning's fight outside of our lines. Major George H. Penrose, Brigade Surgeon, U. S. Vols., accompanied by 1st Lieutenant Franklin M. Kemp, Assistant Surgeon U. S. Army, with ambulances, were sent out to care for and bring in the wounded. The officers met a few natives that they took to be insurgents and unhesitatingly attempted to capture them, and revolvers in hand rode down two of them, and found their rifles in the bamboos near by.

"Major Penrose and his orderly, while watering their horses at the ford, returning, were surprised by two or three Mauser volleys from the enemy concealed across the river. Six insurgent wounded were brought into the hospital."

and during the latter year he returned to the United States, very much broken in health consequent upon his arduous and continuous field service. On 19 April, 1901, he was commissioned captain and quartermaster in the U. S. Army, and is now in service at Seattle, Washington. He married, 22 October, 1901, Katharine Oden, daughter of William Oden Hughart by his wife Sarah Mahon Page.

Captain Penrose has for many years been interested in the genealogy of the Penrose family, and his valuable collections in this direction were placed in the hands of the present writer at the commencement of this work.

APPENDIX.

ADDRESS OF HONORABLE CHARLES BINGHAM
PENROSE, BEFORE THE SENATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,
13 MARCH, 1841, ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RESIGN-ING AS SPEAKER OF THAT BODY.

“Senators: Circumstances have occurred which induce me to resign the office of Speaker at a period in the session somewhat earlier than that which has been indicated by the prevailing usage of this body. If I were about to sever the connection which has subsisted between myself and the Senate of Pennsylvania for so many years under ordinary circumstances, I might perhaps content myself with a simple annunciation of the fact of my resignation, and confine myself to the expression of the profound gratitude with which I have been penetrated for the uniform kindness and friendly courtesy I have experienced at the hands of every one of its members. But there is something perhaps in the position which I now occupy—something in the act which I am about to perform—which may excuse me for craving your indulgence for one moment, while I suggest some of those reflections which the peculiarity of my situation may render not inappropriate to the occasion.

“I am about to surrender the high trust which your generous confidence has confided to me, and this act is to be only precursor of my final separation from a body with which I have been connected for eight years, and over which I have had the honor to preside for a very considerable portion of that time. Here, in the service of the public, I have spent a very large portion of my active life; here in the society of my equals I have found those sympathetic associations, and framed those warm personal attachments which have entwined themselves about my heart, and will only cease to influence that heart when its last pulse shall have ceased to beat. To me it is an epoch in a life which has been cast in a very eventful period, and has not been either without its labors or its vicissitudes. I may be excused therefore, under these circumstances, standing as I do upon a line which is about to separate me from connections so dear—if I should ask you to bear with me, for one moment, while I endeavor to cast an eye of retrospection over the long tract of time which it has been my fortune to traverse as a public man.

“The period of my connection with this body has been one of no ordinary moment in the history of our common country and our glorious Commonwealth. Of its political incidents and changes I have nothing to say. I would not, on an occasion which, to me, possesses so much of tenderness as this, jar even a nerve which might possibly vibrate unpleasantly under the recollection of past political conflicts. I do not deprecate the strife of party. There is so much of good and evil mingled in our cup, in all the conditions of life, that he who would refuse the one because he cannot separate it from the other, must often run the risk of sacrificing both. These party differences, by which we may have been divided, are perhaps essential to the existence of that unsleeping vigilance by which alone republican institutions can be preserved. If there be evil in them, we have the consolation of knowing that there is at the same time so much of good that it would be difficult for any man to affirm that it would be better for him that they did not exist at all.

“For my own part, as an individual, I can truly say, on looking round my brethren here, that however fruitful the long period to which I have referred may have been of party contests of the fiercest character, there is not one of them which has left a sting in my bosom, the recollection of which occasions any, the slightest, unkindness of feelings towards any individual member of the Senate—any emotion which I would blush to disclose on this my final separation from those with whom I have so long co-operated in the advancements of the interests of this great State.

APPENDIX.

“I do not, gentlemen, propose to fatigue you by details. They would be inconsistent with the occasion and equally inapplicable to the purposes with which I set out. When I desired your attention to a portion of my last career, it was only with a view of furnishing you with a rapid survey of the acts in which I have participated, for the purpose of exhibiting the great principles which have constantly directed my conduct as a public man.

“It is scarcely necessary for me to say that I came into public life a much younger man than I am now—with all the sensibilities of an ardent nature, stimulated by a devoted attachment to the benign institutions under which I have been reared, which has grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength. I came too, allow me to add, under the influence of these feelings, with an earnest determination to signalize, if I practically could, my connection with the Legislature of my native State, by leaving behind me some evidence, at least, if not of profitable service to the Commonwealth, of the earnest desire I had felt to testify my gratitude and my devotion to the best interests of those whose generous confidence had sent me here. In the pursuit of this object I endeavored to keep my eye steadily fixed upon that great life-giving and life-sustaining principle which is so strongly announced in that glorious declaration which adorns your walls, that Government was established among men for the benefit of the governed; and if I have departed in a single instance from that polar star which has been fixed in our political firmament for the purpose of directing the course of the representative, I have the consolation of reflecting that the departure was insensible to me. I had, however, higher duties and broader obligations than those which referred exclusively to the people from whom I came. I was a Pennsylvanian by birth as well as education—proud of the ancient Commonwealth in which my destiny had been cast, and wedded to her interests by ties as strong as those which connect the child with the mother by whom he has been borne. The early instincts of the child had been approved and strengthened by the riper judgment of the man. If I had no other merit, I was at all events a Pennsylvanian, and I felt that I owed an allegiance to the great State of which I had been constituted one of the representatives in this body. And worthy indeed was she then, and does she still continue to be, of the highest attachment of all her sons.

“Rich in resources which place her in the front rank of this glorious sisterhood of Commonwealths, endowed by a bountiful Creator with inexhaustible stores of mineral wealth, possessing a fertility of soil and a beautiful variety of scenery such as might well enchant the imagination and captivate the heart, and distinguished above all by a teeming population of hardy, industrious, moral, and in a very high degree intellectual citizens, she may well be regarded by them as an object no less of pride than of affection. To promote her interests and advance her prosperity, then, was one of the motives nearest to my heart when I took my seat in this General Assembly eight years ago, as it has since constituted one of my purest sources of delight throughout the whole period of my services as a public man.

“What was the condition of the Commonwealth at the period to which I refer? Much, it is true, had then been done to advance her great interests, but much yet remained to do. Her physical energies had been cultivated to a large extent; her onward progress had already been distinguished by achievements so stupendous that all the monuments—all that has been recorded of ancient times would dwindle into insignificance in the comparison—so stupendous, indeed, that if by some great calamity our very name had been blotted from the historic page, the philosophical inquirer in after times would have found in our very ruins the evidences that here a mighty people had once lived and flourished. Something, however, and that something of great value, yet remained to be accomplished for the interests of this great State. With all her physical resources and developments, she lacked a system, a broad and generous system, for the intellectual improvement of her people. While everything had been done to unlock the rich treasures of her variegated surface, the enlightened hand of legislation had not yet struck that rock from which the sweet waters of knowledge have since so abundantly flowed.

“When I entered this Hall, my first and most anxious desire was to supply this defect by giving to the people of this Commonwealth a system which would shed the light of moral and intellectual improvement, as the sun of Heaven flings his broad radiance alike over the humblest and the most exalted of her citizens; and it is one of the proudest of my recollections that I had the honor to occupy an humble but secondary position in the great work which was commenced in the Legislature of Pennsylvania, by a distinguished Senator from the county of Philadelphia (the Hon. Samuel Breck), who is entitled to the high distinction of having laid the first stone in our present glorious edifice of popular education. It has been my fortune both to witness and assist the growth of that edifice. It is now far advanced towards completion, and I trust will go on from perfection to perfection, until we shall be able to say, that however much we may have done to develop the physical resources of this State, we have done still more for the improvement of those higher faculties which distinguish man from all that is below him in the order of existence, and exalt him into a nearer communion with that Being in whose image he was created. But, while thus regardful of the intellectual and moral wants of our citizens, I may confidently say that I was not indifferent to the further improvement of the physical condition of the State.

“Although the representative of a district which had never shared but in a very limited degree in the benefits conferred by our great system of Internal Improvements, I did not withhold my hand from its support; and I rejoice to say that during the period of my connection with this Senate I have rendered some assistance in pushing forward that system towards its completion. That we have committed an occasional error, every candid man among us must acknowledge. That, however, is one of the conditions of our existence, political as well as moral; and if we have committed errors it is to be remembered, in our excuse, that they are inseparable from an experiment so novel and so magnificent as that in which we have so boldly embarked.

“To my own constituents, for whose attachment towards me I shall be forever grateful, I can point as an evidence of my labors here, to a great public work now passing through the beautiful valley in which they are located, and affording an outlet to its varied productions, while it has opened to the eye of the tourist a new source of delight in the unrivalled charms of its rich and variegated scenery.

“In the onward progress of the system on which I have been commenting, there have been from time to time difficulties to encounter, and prejudices to overcome, which can scarcely be appreciated by those who have made their appearance in these halls within the last few years. They have been happily surmounted, as they appeared; but there is one among them of so curious a character, and so strikingly illustrative, when compared with the present times, of the rapid progress of public opinion and public improvement during the last few years, that I cannot forbear to give it a place in the remarks which I am now making. It was the famous struggle between the horse and the locomotive—between the application of animal and mechanical power on the railroads of this Commonwealth. It may seem strange to those who are in the daily habit of witnessing the arrival and departure from our depots of that wonderful monument of human ingenuity—the locomotive engine—that the question of its introduction upon our roads was one which shook these halls only a few short years ago, and was decided by but a single vote. I remember the contest well, although I do not see a gentleman around me now who was present then. And I remember, too, that the casting vote was given by myself. Who will doubt now the propriety of the decision? Who will not wonder that it should ever have been a question?

“There was one other great measure to which I will call your attention. It was a measure of relief. At an early period of the Commonwealth, its Legislature, influenced by what might have been then considered an enlightened view of the question, or governed perhaps by narrow reasons of State policy, in order to enforce the payment of the purchase money still remaining due upon the lands within its boundaries, had required that the debts thus incurred should be compounded at an usurious rate of interest. By this process of accumulation those debts had increased to such a fearful extent that in districts not unfortunately blessed with the fertility which distinguishes our valley, we were about to expel, by this inexorable measure of legislation, an honest, industrious, patriotic population, infinitely more valuable to the State than the whole amount of the debt with which they were oppressed. In the struggle with that system it was my pleasure to have borne a part; and after a contest of some years, a more enlightened spirit of legislation discovering the advantage of retaining a population, which was invited by the more liberal policy of the General Government to seek a new home in the fair forests and fat prairies of the boundless west, prevailed in the councils of this State. The effect of their moderation was soon apparent in the preservation and increase of our people, that best resource and highest element of the prosperity of nations.

“I shall not detain you longer with a recapitulation of the events which have marked the period of my service in this body. Nor having done, will I undertake to say of my political career, that it has been without its faults. It is not in human nature to escape from error. We come into this life with a heavy weight of infirmity upon us, which we are doomed to carry with us to its close; and I have only to ask of those who may be disposed, if any such there be, to dwell unkindly on my errors, to allow me at least the charitable drawback of an honest purpose, misled occasionally, if they choose, by the enthusiasm of an ardent temperament. They will find, I trust, upon an examination of my public career, that if I have fallen into errors, they have uniformly sprung from a sincere desire to advance the interests and the honor of the great State of which I am a citizen.

“And now, brother Senators, I am about to close my connection with this body, and to separate from men, towards each of whom I have no other or weaker feelings than those of sympathy and kindness. I could fain have hoped that in leaving this field of my past labors, in tearing myself away from those who have been the partners of many of my toils as well as gratifications, that the condition of our glorious Commonwealth had been less embarrassing than it now is. I feel, gentlemen, that I leave you to sustain a heavy weight of responsibility, but I confide, permit me to say, confide fully in your integrity and wisdom in this the hour of our common trouble. I leave you under the sincere conviction of your general desire to re-establish the fortunes of our native State, and to restore prosperity and happiness to her people. To her and her fortunes you are wedded for good and for evil. She is your common parent, and they are your common constituents, bound to you as you are bound to them, by the triple cord of duty, interest and affection, the most enduring ties which can bind man to man, or exercise an influence over the human heart on this side of that eternity to which we are all fast hastening. I feel and know that you will not disappoint the confidence which has invested you with the high trusts which you severally and collectively hold, but that you will so discharge the duties which you owe to those constituents as shall redound to the fame and honor of our common State. While, therefore, I sympathize deeply over the difficulties and distress which surround you, I take with me the consolation that out of evil your patriotism, intelligence and firmness, cannot fail eventually to produce good. That result is certainly not unattainable.

APPENDIX.

Difficult though the task be, it is still within your power. There is nothing irretrievable in the condition in which we are placed. You have only to turn to the vast treasury of your resources. Look at the lines of your public improvements—think of the wealth which is locked up in the bosoms of your hills—cast your eyes over the surface of your smiling and productive valleys—contemplate the thousands upon thousands of patriotic and industrious people with which our territory is swarming throughout its whole extent—lay down all this picture before you, and then despair if it be possible.

“You have difficulties, it is true, but with all these resources, and, what is still better, with wise heads, strong hands and steady hearts, our great State may yet be released from all the embarrassments which now surround her. It is your task now, and not mine; but though separated from you in person, my heart will continue to be with you at every step in your progress, and my prayers shall be offered that when you come to close, as I am now doing, your connections with this body, you may be able to look back with pleasure to difficulties overcome—to noble achievements effected, and to contentment and abundance restored to the face of a smiling land.

“I linger with you but for one moment longer and that to say ‘Farewell.’ I look around this chamber, which eight years ago I entered as one of the humblest of its members, and I do not, so far as my recollection now serves me, see a single face of all those with whom I was then associated. How transitory and fleeting are all the incidents of this life in which we take so much interest! How perishable are all the enjoyments which surround and connect us with the busy world on which we move! Of those, the earliest of my contemporaries, some have returned to their constituents, to enjoy the approving voice of public thanks for duties well fulfilled. Of others, many others—the mortal frames are now sleeping beneath the clods of the valley, while their immortal spirits have gone to render an account of the still higher trust with which they have been commissioned from on high. What a picture is here! How rapidly do we pass away! How like are we, with all our high hopes and towering aspirations, to the grass which withereth, or the vapor which is melted away before the breath of the morning!

“Brother Senators: I am impressed with a deep sense of the solemnity of this occasion as well in reference to the picture which I have presented, as to my own personal connection with this body. I now separate from you. And here, in the moment of that separation, allow me to offer you my earnest, my profound, my heartfelt acknowledgments for the kindness, the regard, the courtesy which you, on all occasions, have so generously extended towards me. Wherever I go I shall bear with me the recollection of my intercourse with you as one of the sweetest consolations of my life, and whatever may be my future destiny in this changing world, my most ardent prayers shall ever ascend for the prosperity of our glorious Commonwealth, and the happiness and welfare of every individual amongst you.

“Gentlemen: The trust which you have so generously confided to me—the high trust which has been honored by so many abler administrators, and still more honored by the intellectual and moral character of the body with which it is connected, is now surrendered back, unimpaired, I trust, either in usefulness or dignity, into the hands of you by whom it was so generously conferred.”

ADDENDUM.

After the foregoing History of the Penrose Family had gone through the press, and just as the volume was about to be bound, the Honorable Boies Penrose received the following letter from his kinsman, Sir Hector Maclean Hay, together with the accompanying copy of the "Memorial" forwarded in 1788 by Sheffield Howard, Esq. [see note, page 67], to the Commissioners appointed by Act of Parliament for enquiring into the Losses and Services of the American Loyalists. The writer of the letter, as will be seen, is a son of Sir James Douglass Hamilton Hay, and grandson of Sir Thomas Hay, who married Anne, widow of Major Charles Bingham, and daughter of Sheffield Howard, and the mother of Anne Howard Bingham, wife of Honorable Clement Biddle Penrose.

Ingoldsby, Hampton,
Middlesex (England).
December, 1903.

Dear Sir:

About the end of September last I received a letter from Mr. H. E. Woods, of Boston, asking, on your behalf, if I could give him the parentage and ancestry of Sheffield Howard, Esq., of New York, and of Major Charles Bingham, who married Mr. Howard's daughter, Anna Howard. Unfortunately I was unable to do so, nothing among the few family papers I possess giving the information.

Within the last few weeks I have received from one of my sisters, resident in Canada, who was with my Father, Sir James D. H. Hay, at the time of his death, a document, of the existence of which I was ignorant, though, no doubt, it ought to have been sent to me then. It is really of no value, but probably you will think, as I do, that it is interesting, being a fair copy of a Memorial, drawn up by Mr. Sheffield Howard in 1788, which was to be laid before a Royal Commission appointed by Act of Parliament to investigate the claims of American Loyalists, for losses incurred by them in consequence of the War of Independence.

THE PENROSE FAMILY.

I have made an exact verbal copy of this, which I now enclose to you. The old paper, which, I am inclined to think, is in the handwriting of Anna Howard (then Bingham), is considerably decayed, but still perfectly legible, is no doubt a copy made at the time, of the original which was intended to be presented to the Commission, for before each of the two signatures the word (signed) is inserted.

The story connected with this "Memorial" is as follows: Soon after its date, it was entrusted to Major Bingham, together with all the documents referred to in the text, to take with him to Europe to be laid before the Commission. It is said he went first to Paris, where he remained some time, and on his arrival in London, he found that the time allowed for claims to be made had expired, and that Mr. Howard's Memorial could not be received. So far as I ever heard, Major Bingham did not return to New York, or send back the papers, and apparently soon after died. Mrs. Bingham, left a widow, married in 1793, at St. George's Church, Hanover Square, London, Captain Thomas (afterwards Sir Thomas) Hay, and was the mother of my Father, Sir James D. H. Hay, another son, Henry Cranston Hay, and two daughters, Augusta and Harriet Napier Hay, the former of whom died at the residence of Clement B. Penrose, "Belle Lite" in Pennsylvania,* in her early youth. It was from the other daughter, my aunt Harriet, that I first heard the story of the Memorial, but I do not think she was aware of the existence of the "Copy" which was found among my Father's papers.

I remember hearing from my Father a good many years ago, that he had some correspondence with Mr. Charles Penrose, the eldest son, I think, of Clement B. Penrose, but I never heard what the subject of it was.

I do not know when Mr. Howard died, but probably not long after the date of the Memorial, as he was then 85 years of age, but I think it surprising that some effort was not made (if it was not) to recover from the Government of the emancipated Colonies, some portion of the property confiscated during the war. One would have thought, that after the pacification, people who had been endamaged in that way, and subsequently remained citizens of the New Republic, would have been treated generously. Indeed, I think it ought to have been one of the terms of the Treaty of Peace that this should be so.

To refer to the life of Sheffield Howard in New York, we, on this side, know nothing but what he states in the Memorial, except that he married a Miss Thody† (or Thordy) of New York, and have no idea what profession or business he exercised which enabled him to accumulate a fortune. It is possible

* On the bank of the Delaware near Frankford.

† It has always been supposed in the family that she was his second wife and the mother of his children, and was a French Huguenot. His first wife is said to have been a daughter or sister of his tutor, whom he married against his father's commands, which eventually led to his exile to New York, where the rest of his life was passed.—Ed.

that you may be able to enlighten me on this point, for no doubt your Grandfather, Mr. Clement B. Penrose, knew, and may have left some note of it.

I am afraid I shall have exhausted your patience, and so will conclude with best wishes for the New Year.

Believe me, Dear Sir,

TO HON. BOIES PENROSE,
Washington.

Yours very sincerely,
HECTOR M. HAY

To the Honorable Commissioners appointed by Act of Parliament for enquiring into the losses and services of the American Loyalists.

The Memorial of Sheffield Howard Esqr of the City of New York, within the Province of New York in North America.

Humbly Sheweth

That the Memorialist, a native of England (and of the eldest branch of the Illustrious Family of his name), who is now in the eighty-fifth year of his age, passed over from that Country into this, so long since, as the year one thousand seven hundred and thirty seven, that is above half a century ago, and acquired within the intermediate prolonged period, a property both real and personal, which according to the current estimation of so new a Country, might well enough be called a competent, if not a considerable fortune.

That the Memorialist having from the very earliest of the Trouble, and afterward, during the whole period of open hostility with the refractory Colonies, in all its vicissitude of events, been uniform and consistent, in an un-equivocal and unreserved avowal of his attachment to the cause of His Majesty's Government, and to the principle of its paramount right of Supremacy over all these transatlantic Provinces, as well as strenuous and steady in his endeavours to manifest and demonstrate such attachment by every positive overt act within the sphere of his influence and example—was consequently, on the other hand, to the full as much distinguished and marked out, by an over-abundant share of the calamities of the contest.

That the Memorialist states the aggregate and sum total of his losses by violence and other the like lawless means, to be Five and Forty thousand three hundred and ninety Pounds complete, according to the Schedule and details, to be by and by hereto annexed, and that he is now at the verge of extreme old age, from the necessity of continuing his abode at New York, reduced, and that too, under the severest newly devised legal disabilities and disqualifications, to the sad, the super-aggravated distress of shifting for, and eking out a precarious and miserable subsistence from the fragments and the gleanings of his once flourishing, and even over-sufficient Fortune.

That the debilities, the helplessness, and at the same time, the impoverishment of such extreme superannuation, which have been the means of changing the resentment, the exasperation, and the even almost proverbial implacability, of the now wholly Independent Colonies, so far into humanization and compassion as to induce them to afford the Memorialist a quiet and undisturbed sufferance in continuance among them, are also the untoward and only true and assignable reason, for his the Memorialists, not having long since preferred an account of his losses, either to the cognizance of this Board collectively, in London, or yet to that of its members, who now are, or lately were, in Nova Scotia inasmuch as a Sea voyage, although utterly impracticable at his years, was nevertheless, in either case, apprehended to be altogether unavoidable: For the Memorialist sequestered and secluded as he is, from the whole world, has but lately understood, that the examination of sufferers, in their own proper persons, might be dispensed with at discretion, and consequently, that the purposes of this application might long ere now have been effectuated and completed, in the ordinary course of procuration—

That an opening, without the absolute sacrifice of life, being thus found out, for putting in a claim to such participation in the generous bounty of the British Legislature, as it may be in the remedial and compensatory powers of this Board to award in the premises; and the Memorialist more-over representing the account now next to follow, to be in every item avouchable by the most explicit documentary evidence, as well as the unimpeachable and concurrent viva-voce testimony of many American characters of the first description and repute now in London.

He does thereupon, with infinite deference, but with the utmost earnestness and solicitude nevertheless, pray and beseech you Gentlemen of the Commission, to indulge him, in his representative, Captain Charles Bingham, with as early an attention, and as prompt a dispatch, as can possibly consist with the routine of business, and the established forms of the Board.

IMPRIMIS.

Anno 1775. In the year 1775 that is in the very commencement of hostility, the Memorialist was, by violence and other the like lawless means, compelled to accept of arbitrary compositions, upon various specialties of the law, to the collective amount of a considerable sum, as will in due time be particularly detailed

ITEM 3.

Toward the close of the same year there happened a conflagration of prodigious extent within this City imputed to the machinations and secret contrivance of the disaffected inhabitants; a proof of which, the notoriety must of course render unnecessary. In this conflagration, the Memorialist was endamaged in the destruction of several houses, his property, erected upon Scites, of his own likewise as will be proved to the amount

ITEM ET ULTIMAT: 8.

The Memorialist has more-over been deprived in the way of confiscation and sale, of the Property and Fee of a Farm or Plantation in the County of Monmouth within the Neighbouring Province of New Jersey, which cost him £2100, above two and thirty years ago, and which, in its improvement since, could
